INTERESTING ARTICLE — An interesting and informative article entitled, "The Great Canadian Oyster 'Fast Disappearing,'" by Mr. L. P. Tanton of this city, appears in the current number of the Toronto Saturday Night. Mr. Tanton deals very fully and very lucidly with this important question, and the information given will be a revelation to many. This island alone at one time produced more oysters in a single year than the whole of Canada produces today. The story of the decline is a tragedy, and by no means a credit to Canada. It is the old story of reaping without sowing, taking all and giving none in return. We have drawn from this bank with our making any deposits and the account is exhausted. What may be done to restore this bankrupt condition remains to be seen. Mr. Tanton is to be congratulated on his excellent article, and it is hoped the revelation made will result in an awakening.

MINARD'S LINIMENT FOR COLDS, ETC.

PUNCH AND JUDY
Our old friends, Punch and Judy have at last yielded to petrol and become two of the most ardent disciples. Hitherto the puppet show has been trundled around on a barrow, and the showmen, needing more than Coleman's knife grinder, have wasted much time in getting from one suburb to another of London. Now all this is changed, at least by one enterprising Punch and Judy man, who appeared at Hampstead Heath on Whitfriday with his show mounted on the front platform of a small motor car. In a trice the stage was put into position and Punch made his bow to a juvenile audience. As soon as the great drama was played out, down came the stage, the puppets were packed away and the hidden performer had seized the steering wheel and was off to another part of London where a bank holiday crowd was assembled. The plan has its possibilities. What would Sarah Siddons, John Kemble and other rogues and vagabonds have given to be able to flit from town to town in this manner?—Christian Science Monitor.

Feed Conditions

(By Hon W. M. Lea)

May, June and July being our growing months of the year we are now able to fairly estimate the yields of the different crops grown in this Province. Hay and pasture would average closely to 70, of an average crop on our best farm, where live stock farming has been practiced, and 50 per cent, or less on some of the poorer farms, so that it will be necessary for stocking operations during the balance of the summer season and winter. The straw will be lighter than last year although with favorable conditions it may fill well and give a fair yield of threshed grain. Oats, wheat and barley will yield a heavier crop in the western portion of the Province that was favored with more rain during the growing season. Yields of wheat slightly more than average acreage was planted have made good growth and should yield a fair crop. Turnips and other root crops are patchy but have made remarkable growth considering the amount of moisture that has fallen, and with favorable weather conditions for the balance of the season may yet yield a good crop. Corn, where it is grown, which should be on every live stock farm, has made excellent growth and will greatly assist in helping out the feed shortage. It is now apparent that economy must be practiced to carry over as much as possible of our live stock, as selling thin animals on a glutted market will cause a serious loss to the Province, and should be avoided. However, it is useless for a farmer to undertake to carry more than he can properly feed as animals kept from day to day without gaining, waste the amount of feed consumed, and we must get down to that number that are growing steadily or are producing milk with the feed consumed if we can expect to make any profit in the feeding of live stock. Where green feeds of any description including corn are grown for late summer feeding, it would be well for the farmer to save this and use mill feeds to supplement the short and dry pastures for dairy cows. Those may be purchased more easily and the freight charges are very much lower than on hay, and when Bran and Middlings sell within $5, or $6, of the price of hay the economic feedstuffs will use as much as possible of mill feeds and as small an amount of hay as can get along with. Fresh cows on full milk may often be fed at a profit on a ration almost entirely of mill feeds and roots. In fact, under official testing where cows are fed to give the largest amount of milk possible, the ration is composed of ensilage, very little if any hay being consumed. However, this is hardly practiced on the average farm, but grain and concentrated feeds may be used on every farm to considerable extent to substitute hay when it reaches the price of $25 or $30 per ton.

THE MARKETS

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—Receipts of butter here yesterday were 543 packages as compared with 360 packages a week ago and 582 packages on the corresponding day last year. There was little or no change in the market locally, trade being normal in volume, and prices ruling slightly firmer than yesterday. No inquiry was being received from foreign sources, and little export business is at present passing, the market being if the waiting variety.

We quote wholesale jobbing prices as follows:
Pasteurized 40c. to 41c.
Finest creamery 39c. to 40c.
Fine creamery 37 1-2c. to 38 1-2c.

Receipts of cheese yesterday were 5,493 boxes, a considerable decrease as compared with 7,391 boxes for last week Wednesday and 9,872 boxes on the corresponding day a year ago. A considerably weaker feeling developed in the market, Ontario goods selling at Peterborough for 21 5-8c. per pound, this being the lowest figure recorded in some time. Trade was quiet locally, and little business was reported passing over the cables.

PETERBORO, Ont., Aug. 5.—

There were 842 boxes of cheese boarded, all sold at 21 5-8c, market indifferent.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Butter firm. Receipts 12,569 packages. Creamery, higher than extras, 45 1-2c. to 46c.; creamery, extras (92 score); 44 1-2c. to 45c.; cream-

BELGIUM AND THE BELGIANS

In his new book, "Belgium" M. Emile Cammaerts shows that the sharpest divisions of policy and feeling in Belgium have taken place not along the language border but directly across it. "At no period of Belgian history," he says, "did any division follow linguistic frontier. On the contrary most of the political and ecclesiastical units created during the middle ages included both elements of the population and through frequent intercourse and common interests these two people speaking different languages, became gradually welded into one. Belgium, or as it is sometimes called, Flemish culture, though intimately connected with France Germany, is neither French nor German, still less English. Its characteristics are derived from the combination of various European influences strongly moulded by long standing traditions and habits. The will to live together, what they might have expected."

TO BE EXPECTED

A convict, after serving a long sentence, came out of prison in the year 191. An old friend met him at the prison gates. "Well George," said the convict, "What's the news? What's goin' on?" "The whole darned world's at war," George answered, "and prohibition has been established." "Well, well!" said the convict. "To think of prohibition havin' such an effect as that! Well, George, it's bits. The will to live together, what they might have expected."

according to Reman, is at the root of every nationality and proves stronger than unity of race and language. finds nowhere a better illustration than in the strange part played by the Belgian nation in the history of Europe. Common interests, common dangers, common aspirations produced and maintained a distinct civilization which, according to all the laws of materialistic logic, ought to have been wrecked and swamped long ago by the overwhelming influences to which it was subjected. "There is one striking resemblance between all periods of Belgian development. Whether in the ninth, the thirteenth, the fifteenth, or the nineteenth century, they express the civilization of the time and succeed in producing a typical example of the truly European culture."
