Men Marooned

By George Marsh

THE STORY

CHAPTER XI

She was waiting in the clearing when Shot loped up, sniffed, looked at her curiously, then pawed her joyfully with fore feet.

"Shot, you know me?" And she rubbed the ears of the wriggling air-dale.

"He has a good memory for his friends," said Garth, as the dog leaped in the snow around the pleased girl.

"I think it quite wonderful, though, that he should remember me. He knew me but five days."

Garth's mouth curled. "His master knew you no longer." And the factor of Elkwan revealed in the slow color that touched her temples—the swift flickering of heavy-lashed lids.

"His master had reason to remember the guests who insulted him in his own house."

"One of his guests," countered Guthrie, "was an angel of mercy. We seldom forget the visitation of angels, do we?"

"And the other—an ungrateful scandal-monger."

"I told you last night he was a blessing in disguise."

She looked squarely in his eyes as she said: "But I am to prove it to you. But I did not believe you, Mr. Exlie."

With a gesture of helplessness, he insisted, "But how am I to prove it to an unbeliever?"

Her eyes clouded. "Let's walk along the shore," she parried, and led the way, Shot circling her, begging for a frolic.

"You're trying again for the spring trade from the island?" she asked.

"Oh, with Souci there, and the echo of his spirit voices in their ears, we shall hold the hunters who crossed the strait."

"Then Elkwan will have a wonderful year?"

"Yes, the best in its history."

"Because of its new factor?"

"Because of Etienne Savanne and Saul Souci."

"No," vehemently, "because you went inland and found Souci, and had the nerve to cross the channel through the ice in a York boat, then took a long chance over the new ice to reach the island in time; Mr. Cameron knows."

He glanced sharply at the clean profile, crowned by a plume of wind-tossed hair. "You're a doughty champion."

"No, I'm only a fair critic."

"May I never have a fairer—nor one more unfair?"

"Unfair? What do you mean, Mr. Exlie?"

She had given him an opening. "I mean, Joan Quarrier, that you have shut your heart to the truth," he plunged in impetuously. "I mean that you are coupling me with ghosts—dead memories; that you will not see—understand—in his eagerness to clarify her vision of him—erase the memory of Ethel with whom, in spite of his denials, he still seemed hopelessly involved, Garth floundered—came to a halt through sheer excess of emotion."

"Can't we continue the good friends we are, Mr. Exlie? We need friendship—understanding, up here on this lonely coast. Can't we—like two good comrades—hold to what we have?"

Dazed, helpless in the face of her obsession—her evident conviction that her brother had been the cause of his ultimate break with Ethel Falconer Guthrie walked on in silence.

"Can't we hold to our friendship," she repeated, facing him, and slipping off her mitten, extended her hand.

He took it. At the raw pain in his eyes Joan Quarrier's lips opened in an involuntary catch of the breath. Her eyes widened in a look of wonder, as if startled by what she saw.

"You know you always will have my friendship," he said thickly. "I'm coming down the coast in February—to see by—friend. May I?"

"Your friend will be very glad to see you."

At the door of the mission, she met his reluctant hood-by with a smile so personal—so like a caress that the hand she gave her shook like a leaf in the wind.

"My friend," he repeated under his breath as he followed Shot back to Etienne and the waiting dog team, "my friend—my world."

Hour by hour, over the coast-ice, the light sled reeled off the miles. So good was the going, so keen the five great huskies for the trail, that the men left their robes only to stretch their legs. The forty miles to the Big Willow river slid past by early afternoon, and the hungry men turned in the river mouth to build a fire from driftwood and boil their kettle.

Twenty miles directly across the strait, and gray Akimiski hills parted to form Seal Cove.

"I'd give a good deal to know how they took the news over there of the loss of the northern fur, Etienne," said Guthrie, busy with his plate of beans and bacon. "Hello! There's a team coming in over the ice. Wonder who it is."

For a time Etienne studied the black object through the binoculars, but when the kettle and fry-pan had been stowed and the sled cover relashed, two rifles in their skin cases rode by the side of the passengers.

A mile from the noon camp at the river the sled, evidently headed for the mouth of the Kapiskau, drew in-shore.

"A hunter from de Kapiskau. We weel no wear how dey swear on de schooner dis Christmas."

The dog-team slowed to a walk and shortly were within speaking distance.

"Kpaui!" called Savanne. "Were you got?"

Leaving his panting dogs, who straightway lay down on the ice, the stranger hurried to the sled from Elkwan. As he approached, it was evident to the two men that the Cree was laboring under strong excitement. His sled was heavily loaded and his hard breathing indicated that he had run much crossing the strait.

Staggering up, he gasped: "De boat—ovair! All gone! McDona! Ha! Ha! dead—all dead."

"What?" cried Garth, "the schooner's crew—dead?"

"You come from dere—you see dem?" demanded the astute Etienne. A sinewy hand shot out, and gripping the Cree's shoulder, shook him violently.

"You see dem? How many?" repeated the half-breed, searching the Indian's face in an attempt to probe the truth of his statement.

"I see one dead man. No answer when I yell," insisted the other, and seemingly at the memory of the ship of the dead, his small eyes filled with dread.

"What happened? Was this man shot?" demanded Garth, exchanging glances with Savanne.

"He die of sickness—I look an' run. It was ver' bad down dere cen dat boat," said the Indian with a shudder.

"Were the dogs there?"

"I see no dog."

Were you from married Savanne, thrusting a face fierce with suspicion, into the Cree's.

"From de Kapiskau. I go to de boat to trade some fox."

"You get dat flour from de boat—steal it" hazarded Etienne, guessing at the nature of the bulky load on the Indian's sled.

The Cree nodded. "Dey not use it now."

The swart face of the head man at Elkwan hardened into creased leather as he turned to Garth, and whispered: "I don lak dis ting. He see one man. Mebbe de oders' ambush us. What we do?"

"I'm going over to find out. It's my duty. Boucher will wait for days. They may not all be dead. I'm going."

"Suppose eet see a trick? Suppose de ones not dead wait for der revanche, wen we come?"

"We'll stalk 'em an see."

TWENTY DEAD

(Special to The Guardian)
TORONTO, Ont., Mar. 21—Twenty dead, nine injured, such would appear to be the story of the wreck of two C. N. R. trains at Droocourt yesterday morning. The north and west bound train which collided with the Winnipeg train did not wait at a turnout siding. Some one is going to be asked "Why?"

Engineer Verne Alexander, who was driving the north and west bound train, twenty minutes late, is said to have jumped when he saw the approaching train from Winnipeg. He lives to tell why he over-ran the switch at which it is claimed, he had instructions to pass. Passengers who were on train No. 3 the westbound one say that just before the crash Conductor Benjamin Barstead was to be seen running in the colonist car. Then they heard the emergency signal for the engineer to stop the train. That effort came too late and Conductor Barstead is dead.

There are some sorrows which seem to tender for words and yet we often realize that loving hearts often help to lighten the burden of grief.

We cannot understand why those sad separations are permitted, but by and by when our probation here is ended all the dark things will be made plain and parting from those we love will only be for "a little while" but the joyful reunion will be forever and forever.
