THE CEMENT INDUSTRY

The numerous ways in which cement can be applied in so many different spheres outside of the Building trades, Public Works, Roadways etc., which also absorb enormous quantities, as well as the increasing demand for modern scientific discoveries applied to the economic production of cement have induced a group of business men to form a company backed by strong capital: THE NATIONAL CEMENT CO., for the manufacture and distribution on a large scale of high grade Portland Cement.

Having engaged experts in construction and specialists in the manufacture of cement, The National Cement Co. has immediately set to work. They have secured a property where an abundance of raw material is, assured and are actively engaged in constructing a plant that is up-to-date in every respect. The Machinery and Equipment which will be installed is the most modern and perfect that can be secured.

Horribles! Horribles! This Afternoon

Everything is now completed for the big parade this afternoon. There will be about twenty teams in all and already there is an entry list of over 200 paraders so that this will without doubt be the best turnout in recent years.

At 2 p.m. sharp the parade will start from the McLaine Service Station Grafton street. From there they will proceed up Grafton and out Great George to Easton, turning here they will come back up Grafton to Queen up Queen to Easton down Easton to Rochford down Rochford to Water up Water to Weymouth up Weymouth to Easton thence to Prince and down Prince to starting point McLaine Service Station.

The three judges will be posted at the corner of Kent and Great George and will have an opportunity of viewing the parade from both sides.

In order not to interfere with the speeding on Great George St. it has been planned to cover this street first and so give the horsemen a chance during the remainder of the day.

In order to make the parade a success it is requested that all participants be promptly on time as there will be positively no delay in starting. So now boys let's go make it a good one!

HORRIBLE CHARACTERS

Horrible characters there will be Scantlorthy Worth and Joe O'Brine. You have often seen before.

But never during past parades have you heard so much noise. As you will hear on New Year's Day.

By Horrible girls and boys.

Percy Down the fat old "woman" will be there and hard at work it's very hard to trim him. When he is bringing home the pork.

Free Rum and Prohibition will be there quite true to life. Ch'town's best musicians with Fiddle Drum and fife.

Of all the funny faces you have ever seen.

The Horrible performances will make them all look green.

McLaine Service Station will likely be a surprise. When they are not selling automobiles. They are making a Horrible noise.

So rain or shine tomorrow. Don't make the big mistake. Be out to see the fun. That the Horribles will make.

long felt the need of an ample water supply. Each of his camps is equipped with a bath room and despite the popular impression that people at summer camps bathe in the lake, the hotter the day, the more the bath tubs are used. Mr. Folsom is therefore installed for him a pump saving a capacity of 125 gallons per minute. The water will be taken from a nearby stream and will be delivered to his present storage tanks. Power from the new plant will be available for operating pumps, washing machines, etc. All of the lighting and pumping machinery is being supplied by Fairbanks, Morse & Company of Boston, for whom E. E. Nelson is dealer in his section.-Bangor Daily News.

Mr. MacKenzie, above referred to, is an Islander, a son of Mrs. E. MacKenzie, Haviland St., City. He has been connected with West Outer Camp for the past eleven years, in the capacity of Assistant Business Manager. In October he, in partnership with his brother, George V. MacKenzie of Cambridge Mass., took over the entire business from the former proprietor, Gilbert & Combs, Mr. MacKenzie knows the business thoroughly and should make good in his new endeavor.

These Camps, situated near Kinco on Moosehead Lake, and twenty miles north of Greenville, a main line C. P. R. station, are the most up-to-date and exclusive in the State of Maine. They comprise thirty complete log cabins with a living room, bath-room and two or three sleeping rooms each. Cabin accommodations for two to six persons. Well equipped tents are also provided in the busy season. All meals are served in the Dining Hall, and only those who have been there entail an expenditure of 3000 dollars, and will add greatly to the comfort of future guests.

Moosehead Lake is a far famed fishing field, and during May and June many a "beauty" is reeled in by the guests of West Outer, and August brings, principally, tourists and rest seekers, while in Autumn months game hunters made their headquarters at the "Home in the Wild," as this resort is popularly called. We congratulate these well known Islanders upon their energetic enterprise, and bespeak for them a generous share of success.

JANE DECIDES Chapter 65

For several days the mother was unusually silent. The three problems weighed upon her. The result of her visit to Claire was nothing. Claire asked her to tell Luther she would consent to a divorce. They had quarreled, and made up, and she had left without promising, or even repeating her refusal.

Luther was home a great deal now. Claire probably had refused to see him any more. Often, silently, he would get up after he had finished his pipe, when the early dinner was over, and go out alone. And a little after 11 he would come back alone.

"He ought to buy a season ticket for Claire's show," Amy remarked flippantly once when he went out. "He'd save money that way."

One night Mrs. Talbot asked him where he was going. He said "to the theatre." "I'd love to see Claire act," she announced. "Will you take me?" Luther protested that she would be "shocked." But she went—and was not shocked. She had been to several plays, carefully chosen for their innocuous qualities by Amy. She and to half a dozen operas. She found herself feeling quite excited at the prospect of brilliant lights and colorful costumes as she and Luther climbed on a bus and rode downtown through the warm Spring evening.

Claire appeared first as a "snow ball girl." The costume was a big puff of white satin, something like a child's rompers, cut very low and without sleeves, but with a band of white fur around her neck, and straps of white fur around her wrists, and a close fitting white fur cap—an odd contrast of fur decollete that was most attractive. The bloomers ended way above the knees, showing white silk tights and high white kid shoes banded with white fur. She sang a rollicking little song and was pelted with imitation snow-balls during the chorus.

This was her star feature. The rest of the time she took part with others, once in Dutch Costume that made her extremely young and demure; and once in a dignified Elizabethan dress, where she did a stately dance; and several times in the fantastic abbreviated dresses popular that winter.

"I suppose you'll disapprove of Claire more than ever now, since you've seen her like this," Luther remarked.

"No, why should I disapprove? These girls aren't like girls in a drawing room; they're just part of a bright colored picture."

That was her answer, an answer that made Luther stare with amazement. "Well, you are getting on!" he commented, thinking of the violent denunciation that would have followed Claire's first appearance some months before.

Mrs. Talbot suddenly saw a way into Luther's confidence. Up to this time he had never mentioned Claire, except to defend her against criticism. Mrs. Talbot began talking of Claire as they left the theatre, and of some of her pretty coaxing ways, and of her generosity toward Amy when Amy first came to the city.

"No, why should I disapprove of Claire more than ever now, since you've seen her like this," Luther remarked.

"Not at all, I like her very much. She's—of course, she rebels a little against restraint or criticism, but that's natural, all pretty girls are a little spoiled."

"I suppose you'll hate her if I tell you she wants to get rid of me entirely," Luther said. And he waited for denunciation.

"There was a silence. Then—"

"Of course I don't approve of divorce. But if two people cannot get along with each other, I agree they should be apart. And if they are going to live apart, which certainly is not being married, they might as well be legally, as well as physically free. But mind, that's not saying I approve of divorce."

Amy wasn't sure she meant all she said in that speech. But she was trying desperately to win Luther's entire confidence. Already she had been rewarded with some of it.

Another silence.

"Then you think I ought to let Claire get rid of me entirely?"

"I don't think Claire knows her own mind," Mrs. Talbot answered slowly. "I wouldn't do anything, but I certainly would not try to see her. I would not even go to her show—those doormen all know you; they speak to you by name; they certainly tell her you come nearly every night."

Luther did not answer. After a time Mrs. Talbot went on.

"As a matter of fact, Jane worries me more than either of you two. She seems to think now that if she marries Donald, he'll tire of her just because he doesn't specially approve of marriage—and then she'll have to go through a heart-breaking separation. She has some wild idea that if she simply lives with him, no one in that mining camp will know, so she won't be apparently breaking any convention—and Donald won't feel what she calls 'tied to her.' I can't made her out—I declare, life is almost too complicated for me."

"I won't let her do anything foolish," Luther promised, and his words brought comfort to the harassed little woman.

But Jane had already decided.
