Press Is Castigated In Satirical Address By Lord Chief Justice

TORONTO, Aug. 30.—The fourth Estate was impaled on the barbed wire of the Lord Chief Justice of England yesterday when Lord Hewart of Bury unburdened himself of some of the thoughts which he has been entertaining regarding the institution of the press and the owners of newspapers.

His Lordship, with an exquisite irony, indicated nearly everything that was reprehensible in the offices of newspapers, to the audible enjoyment of the large number of lawyers and judges who attended the joint luncheon of the Canadian and Empire Clubs in the King Edward Hotel yesterday.

Monster Working Mischief He pictured the printing machine as a monster working mischief not only in the realm of domestic relations, but also in international affairs.

Premier Makes Defense In response, Premier Ferguson said that while endorsing the vote of thanks, proposed by Col. Alex. Fraser, he ventured to inform the Lord Chief Justice that in this country journalism had not gone entirely to the "bow-wow" stage, as it had—judging from his Lordship's remarks—in the Old Country.

Modifies It a Bit His Lordship the Chief Justice, after Mr. Ferguson had spoken, also said that he was frequently supposed to be serious when he was merely joking and taken to be joking when he was quite serious.

It Pays To Get The Facts A large proportion of all the nerve energy generated in a normal body is expended in the act of seeing.

French Canadian

Misses English Canadian Books

SOME LEADING CANADIAN AUTHORS WIDELY READ IN FRANCE ARE LITTLE KNOWN IN QUEBEC

QUEBEC, Que., Aug. 29.—Why is it that the literature of English-speaking Canada is so little known to French-speaking Canadians?

While the books of several of our leading authors have been translated into French and are widely read in Paris, they are practically unknown in the Province of Quebec. Probably the principal reason for this ignorance lies in the fact that the universities and colleges of the oldest province entirely omit English-Canadian literature from their curricula. They provide comprehensive courses in English literature; French-Canadian writers receive due attention; but an important national body of novelists, poets and historians is ignored.

The French-Canadian collegian completes his education without having received any encouragement to read the novels of Sir Gilbert Parker, or the poems of Archibald Lampman, Charles G. Roberts, and Duncan Campbell Scott, works which are innately Canadian and play an important part in interpreting the life of the nation. Though he will read some Canadian books in English, he will naturally turn with greatest pleasure to those published in his own language and the works of English-Canadians available to him in French will be pitifully few.

But if this student travel abroad, the situation will be very different. In Paris he will come upon French translations of several of these authors and will find that they are enjoying wide popularity.

Thus M. Laroche, who writes upon literary and artistic subjects for French-Canadian periodicals, remarked the other day that he never heard of Professor Stephen Leacock until he went to Paris. There he heard Leacock's nonsense books greatly praised, but it was not until he had read several of them in French that he learned that the author was one of his own countrymen. Yet he had been educated in the province in which Prof. Leacock resides.

A few of Sir Gilbert Parker's novels have undergone translation in France, but they have not reached the French-Canadian reader. Surely such stories as "The Seats of the Mighty," and "When Valmond Came to Pontiac," both of which portray in graphic manner the early life of French-Canadian pioneers, are a ready public if they were published in the Province of Quebec today in the French language.

Of recent years a number of books dealing with Canada's senior province have been published in English and have been read and appreciated in every province save that of which they treat. One of the most interesting of these is a collection of French Canadian studies prepared by Frank Oliver Call which, it has been pointed out, would lend themselves readily to translation. It is suggested by M. Laroche that capable translations of such books would be welcomed by the French-Canadian reader.

ENTERTAINED—Mr and Mrs. Wiley of Boston, U. S. A., arrived here by motor and are visiting Mrs. Wiley's mother, Mrs. Pauline Gotell. Mrs. Wiley gave a dance in the Town Hall on Thursday night, the 18th, to a large number of friends and relations. Music was furnished on the piano by Miss Easton and the violinists were John C. Gotell, Albert King, James J. Condon, William Fitzgerald. Needless to say every person went away well satisfied, all wishing for Mrs. Wiley to come again.

GEORGETOWN SHIPPING.—While Capt. W. J. Sigsworth of the S. S. St. George, is away for ten days his place is being filled by Capt. C. M. Fitzgerald.—D. G. S. "Bayfield," Capt. McCarthy was in port for shelter during the heavy south east wind. The protective service boat 628, Capt. John McLeod was in Grand River on Sunday. He reports everything in the run running business is very quiet. On Saturday he went around East Point up as far as Fairfield and no vessels were in sight.—Schr. Jessie Brown, Capt. W. G. Richards, arrived from Grand River where she discharged a load of coal at Chapel Wharf and will proceed to Pictou, N. S., for another load.—Schr. White Bird, Capt. Russell White arrived from Cape George N. S., with a load of gravel to be landed at Ings' Wharf for Mayor and Town Council.

STARTING A FIRE Were you ever out camping and spoiled a wonderful morning trying to build a campfire when the wind is blowing? Here's an idea which will do away with that trial. Take with you some of these small cans of heat which can be purchased very cheaply; light one of these and pile your wood on top of it. In a minute or two you will have a roaring fire. We never travel without this equipment. I never throw away round covered cartons in which is purchased ice cream or cottage cheese. These should be washed at once in warm suds, rinsed quickly in cold water and wiped dry. They will then hold their shape. Into these may be packed olives, pickles, jams, preserves, mayonnaise ice cream and dozens of articles of food, for motor trips and picnics. On these may be stenciled a design or flowers from seed catalogues may be used, and they are fine for starting seeds indoors and children love them for their marbles and what not.

I save all fingers from old rubber gloves and use them for drawing over tops of bottles when travelling. Have tried all manner of devices and find this the simplest and most satisfactory.

General Wolfe

Statute Kidnapped

FAMOUS EFFIGY OF BRITISH HERO, WHICH WAS CARVED FOR NICHE IN QUEBEC BUILDING 150 YEARS AGO NOW ON EXHIBIT IN MONTREAL

MONTREAL, Que., August 30.—General Wolfe is in Montreal for a prolonged vacation visit—in effigy. A wooden statue of the British conqueror of Canada, to which attaches a romantic history covering more than 150 years, now stands in all its martial splendor in the McCord National Museum, Sherbrooke Street west, having been loaned to that institution for its Wolfe-Montcalm exhibit by the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec.

For a century and a quarter this brilliantly colored statue of General Wolfe looked down on the activity of one of Quebec's busiest street intersections from a niche in the wall of a building at the corner of St. John and Palace Streets. Its vigil was interrupted by an adventurous sea voyage, taken at the wanton request of a party of midshepmen. It was placed in its niche in 1771 and only removed at the time of the present century when the assaults of weather made it desirable that it be given the protection of a glass museum case.

At the time of the conquest a statue of St. John Baptiste occupied the sacred niche, but the owners, fearing lest the British desecrate the sacred figure, removed it to the care of a religious house. In 1771, a butcher by the name of George Hipps came into the possession of the building and the vacant niche and in an expansively patriotic moment ordered a statue of the general from two brothers Chotelle, workers in wood.

The unique memorial was carved under the eyes of James Thompson, who fought with Wolfe at the Plains of Abraham, and from sketches drawn by his hand. It may be remarked that Thompson was far from satisfied with the result. Certainly from an artistic point of view the work would not hope for a place among the classics. So zealous was the British butcher of his acquisition that he had a clause placed in the title deed of the property to the effect that whoever later came into possession of the house must preserve the statue. This was not always easy. Several times disgruntled citizens threw the statue from its niche, causing serious damage to its facial lineaments. Its crowning indignity befell it when, in 1836, a party of light-minded midshepmen from the H. M. S. "Inconstant" kidnapped it and smuggled it aboard their vessel.

For several months the general sailed the seas, visiting Halifax, Bermuda and finally Portsmouth. At last the midshepman of his company, gave him a new coat of paint and shipped him home to the Mayor of Quebec with their most delighted citizens. The good burghers were so delighted at his return that they staged a fête in his honor.

The succeeding 60 years were peaceful ones for the now ageing wooden soldier. A more ambitious building replaced that upon the wall of which he had so long stood and he was elevated to a new niche farther above street level. Gradually he began to show his years. Winter winds and summer suns worked havoc in his sinews. In order to preserve him from complete disintegration he was given into the custody of the Quebec Literary and Historical Society.
