MISUNDERSTANDING WITH GREECE HAS BEEN CLEARED UP

LONDON, Feb. 24.—The following statement of the interview which General Sarrail, commander of the French troops in the Balkans, recently had with King Constantine, has been telegraphed from Athens: "During his conversation with the King, General Sarrail showed that the military measures of the Allies were irresistibly imposed by the situation. He ventured the opinion that the King, in similar circumstances, would have done the same. "No Allied measures whatever were taken with the object of forcing Greece to abandon her neutrality. Greece was absolutely free to act according to her interests and that was why while recognizing the value of Greek friendship and the bravery of the Greek army, the Allies took their military measures as if the Greek factor might fail them. But the military measures of the Allies were never intended to wound Greek susceptibilities or offend the Greek Sovereign whose great ability is universally admired. "General Sarrail gave clear answers to the King's questions and cleared up several matters which had been the cause of misunderstandings. He concluded the audience by expressing the hope that in the future similar misunderstandings might be avoided.

Swedes Skeptical Of Efficiency of British Blockade

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Feb. 23.—(Correspondence)—The British blockade of Germany has failed because it came too late, according to the Swedish press and Swedish business men. As far as Sweden and the other Scandinavian countries are concerned, the blockade only became really effective last April. For eight months prior to that time, or since the very start of the war, the Germans, anticipating England's tactics, were purchasing enormous quantities of military supplies, especially copper, cotton, antimony and tin, through Sweden, Denmark and Norway. Importers here are convinced that by the time the blockade was perfected Germany had stored up such quantities of these and other war materials as to meet all her needs for possibly two years. The claims made by the British Government that great quantities of war material have been smuggled into Germany through Sweden are bitterly resented by Swedish merchants. These claims, which have been given as a reason for placing all sorts of restrictions on Swedish mercantile trade, are based on statistics showing great increases in Sweden's importations from England and America. The Swedish merchants point out, however, that prior to the war, Sweden was a heavy purchaser of German goods. The war has practically paralyzed this trade, and the country has had to turn to other markets. An opinion frequently expressed here is that as far as the Scandinavian countries are concerned, England has only succeeded in creating ill feeling among the neutrals by her blockade, without seriously injuring Germany.
