CHAPTER X A CHILD IS BORN

"I wish my man would come," Mrs. Henry said, feverishly. "I've thought he'd have been here before now." He couldn't possibly have got through so soon, Myrtle assured her. The road is probably blocked for forty miles, or more. It was late that night, and they were four in the tent. Myrtle had found the hen's nest and had ditched in the garden; Myrtle and Evelyn and Mrs. Henry, and a young boy of three hours old. Every now and then the earth would tremble, and a low rumble would come muttering across the dark country. The earth tremor was still persisting, but the petulant scream of the baby was a reassuring sound. "If they cry it means they're all right," said Myrtle. She was in terror lest she might not have done all she could. Little Henry had come too early into the world. Somewhere she had heard that in that case a baby should be wrapped in cotton wool, soaked in olive oil. There was no olive oil, but there was lard to be rescued from where it had been thrown on the kitchen floor, and butter-mustin Mrs. Henry used for making cheese. Myrtle had swathed the baby until he looked like a small cocoon. He was warm enough in his mother's arms on a mattress Myrtle had dragged from the house. The night was hot and close. Nothing more could be done. "I wish I wasn't so scared," said Mrs. Henry, softly. "Someone come to-morrow," replied Myrtle. "We must try to sleep."

got them some cold meat and bread, and gave Mrs. Henry some milk. "I'm going to walk to the bridge," she said. "I might see someone in the 'Petersdown' direction." "You won't go further will you?" said Mrs. Henry, instinctively clutching her baby with a look of dread. "Can I come?" said Evelyn turning pale. Myrtle realized then how completely her presence sustained them. "No, Evelyn you stay here and look after Mrs. Henry. I won't be long. I promise I won't go far." They looked at her uneasily. She set off on the tossed cracked road out alone in the empty darkness. The land she was filled with fears, too nearly rational to be suppressed. "Is this the way to the world? Is it possible that the rest of New Zealand has been destroyed? Are we the only ones left alive?" Her lips, for some reason, were dry and swollen. (To be Continued)

In Memoriam

ANGUS MACKENZIE

This city and province lost an old and a widely known citizen when Angus MacKenzie passed away at 290 Gratton Street on Monday, July 13th.

The late Mr. MacKenzie was born in Shamrock, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Donald Squire MacKenzie of that place. He was in his 87th year.

He had been in failing health for some time but it was only recently that he became seriously ill.

He was a gentle type of man, he had an unusual capacity for making friends and he valued his friendly highly. It was only natural to expect, therefore, that he would have a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, especially in this city where he had resided for many years.

He is survived by his wife, formerly Annie Bruce of Grandview, P.E.I., who is at present residing with her daughter Mrs. C. L. Jackett in Great Falls, Montana. Other sons and daughters are Mrs. J. B. Godfrey, Missall, Montana; Mrs. Alex. Scott, Halifax; Dan in Seattle; Hugh in San Francisco and Bruce in Oakland, Cal.

The following brothers and sisters also survive: Mrs. J. A. MacDonald, Los Angeles; Mrs. Flora Brown, Portland, Oregon; Dan in San Francisco and Kenneth in Stanchel, P. E. I.

Mrs. Brown came to the province a short time ago to visit her brother and was at his bedside when he passed away.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon from St. James Presbyterian Church. Services were conducted by Rev. T. H. Bussell Somers, assisted by Rev. G. Carlyle Webster.

The honorary pallbearers were: Messrs. D. A. MacKinnon, W. A. Stewart, W. M. MacMillan, D. N. MacKay, M.L.A., Murdoch Ross, George MacLeod, Angus MacKenzie and Joseph Storey. The active Springton Cemetery.
