Burning The Heather Hills

All over the Highlands of Scotland huge fires are to be witnessed early every spring.

By day dense clouds of smoke hang in the air; by night the red glow in the sky may be seen for miles around.

These fires are not accidental. They are started for a definite object, and their progress is scientifically and intelligently controlled.

The object of this burning is to get rid of excessive growth of old heather, and thus allow room for fresh young heather-shoots and grass. Young heather is greedily sought after, and is excellent feeding for both sheep and deer.

When the heather is on fire the surface growth alone is attacked the flames. The roots retain their vitality, and from these new shoots spring up in due course. Young grass is also ready, at the first approach of warmer conditions to send forth a luxuriant growth.

These annual clearances also afford excellent feeding grounds for feathered game. Heather burning is usually done by the farmer whose sheep roam over the hillside. But to a very great extent it is the landowner who indicates what shall be burned and what shall be left.

Burning is carried out as early in the season as the farmer desires and weather permits. It would be a hopeless task to attempt burning when both ground and growth were sodden with rain. Whatever be the state of the weather, however, no burning must take place later than April.

Brown Heart in Turnips

Before the first bush is set a light, various considerations must be carefully studied. It is of the utmost importance that winds of a shifting nature be avoided, otherwise areas not intended to be burned might take fire. Should such a mishap occur, the flames might easily get beyond the control of even an army of beaters.

When a whole stretch requires to be cleared beyond which the fire could not very well travel, one man might easily control the burning. At no time, however, is the heather ever left to burn at will.

Only very rarely are the flames permitted to travel with the wind. This would be too dangerous. The dried heather, intermixed with rank grass, is like touchwood.

The nature, cause and prevention of brown heart in turnips has been under investigation by the Dominion Department of Agriculture since 1928 when this disorder was first reported for losses amounting to $50,000 in Prince Edward Island alone. Its destructive nature in 1934 showed an increase over previous years. Typical symptoms may be found in turnips ranging in size from seedlings to large roots. Brown heart is detected only by cutting into the turnip and it is recognized as a well-defined brownish and mottled central area, frequently characterized by concentric rings. The condition of the disorder varies with the intensity of the attack. Freshly cut affected turnips are water-soaked in appearance. It has been demonstrated experimentally and otherwise, says

Canadian Barley Feed

In view of the renewed interest in Canadian barley as one of the best feeds for many classes of live stock, a definition of the terms used with reference to grades mentioned in the Canada Grain Act, 1930, is not without point. Damp barley means barley containing over 17 per cent of moisture and according to the regulations cannot be graded higher than No. 3 Canada Western barley, artificially dried or not. No. 3 Canada Western may be said to be the principal grade for feed barleys, the higher grades of six-row and two-row barleys being used by the malting trade. In the feed grades, with the exception of the lowest grade, No. 6, it is absolutely necessary that the barley be "sweet." This means that the barley must not be heated or mustered. Heated and mustered barley, in fact like most of the various causes of unsoundness, may be detected by sight. The heating may also be self-evident by the odor of mustiness if caused by damp, or by smoke or cooking if from heat. In mustered barley the musty odour is pronounced and may be accompanied by excessive dust, evidence of being stored in an excessively moist state. Artificially dried grain is barley that has contained too high a moisture content and is therefore artificially dried. As the drying is usually done in terminal elevators, the actual operation does not come within the purview of the grower or shipper. Of all the visual causes of unsoundness, "frosted barley" is determined by the cutting of the berry. A frosted kernel will show a looseness of the hull and also a discoloration, and often a space may be seen at the bottom of the crease. Frosted barley may often be detected by the presence of a transverse ridge or hump in the hull across the back of the kernel.

the 1931-2-3-4 report of the Division of Botany, Central Experimental Farm, that the presence of lime in the soil favours brown heart. Increases in brown heart in turnips varied in direct proportion to the amount of lime in use. The disorder is retarded appreciably by applications of manure to turnip land, it has not been demonstrated that manure alone will accomplish much towards solving the problem where land is abundantly of the highly beneficial, used at the rate of one pound per acre and increasing so up to 15 pounds per acre. On a commercial basis, control was less positive when the borax was mixed with the fertilizer and applied by means of a machine seeder.

Value of Cream Desserts
Cream desserts, whether whipped, moulded, or frozen, are the most popular of all items on the menu, and the cost of making them, particularly when the none knows how, is comparatively small in relation to the nourishment they supply. No matter what the other ingredients may be, cream makes the dessert a dish of high food value. Although cream varies in composition according to its percentage of fat, all cream, like other fats, furnishes heat and energy to the body. Cream, in addition, is one of the best food sources of vitamins A and D. Vitamin A is essential for the promotion of growth in the young, and the total absence of this vitamin in food causes cessation of growth, wasting, and lowered resistance to infectious diseases. Vitamin D prevents rickets, cures skeletal diseases, hastens the healing of fractures, promotes normal teeth development and prevents

Dangers of Fumigation
While it is admitted that fumigation by hydrocyanic gas is a very effective method of dealing with objectionable household insects, the Entomological Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture has issued a warning in the booklet on how to combat household pests. Hydrocyanic acid gas is one of the most effective fumigants known, says the booklet, and may be employed without fear of injury to furniture, fabrics, and other household goods and equipment, but the gas is extremely poisonous to animals and human beings. It should be used only by intelligent and careful persons fully aware of its dangerous properties and preferably equipped with gas masks. A matter of fact in Ontario, the fumigation of dwellings may be undertaken only by licensed operators in possession of a permit issued by the Provincial Department of Health. Similar restrictions are now in force in Montreal and other municipalities are following suit. Owing to the exceeding dangerous character of this gas, only buildings which have been completely vacated should be fumigated. It would be highly dangerous to fumigate the inner closets, semi-detached houses or single rooms or apartments in occupied buildings. Full directions are given in booklet, but the other, and less cumbersome methods of destroying the household pests which are explained in the booklet will be of more practical interest to most occupiers of homes.

Pullorum Free
Dr. C. H. Weaver of the Health of Animals Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture, who is in charge of the Poultry Pathology Laboratory at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, has prepared a plan for the eradication of pullorum disease from the poultry flock. The plan is based on the practice of blood testing, and the chief object, as W. A. Brown, Chief of the Poultry Services of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, points out, is to place in the hands of breeders and hatcherymen a definite plan whereby their flocks may become established and recognized as pullorum free. "Because of the advances that have been made in the detection of all infected flocks in the flock; (2) removal of the infected birds; and (3) exclusion of subsequent possible infection from outside sources. Poultry flocks segregate themselves into two classes as regards eradication, namely, the breeder or hatchery with one home flock and the hatchery with many flocks. Dr. Weaver's suggestions include plans applicable to both categories, and flocks point a way by which many few free flocks that are usually found in any one test may be used to the end desired. A copy of the plan may be had on application from the Publicity and Extension Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.
