Mr. Bennett's Program

One of the parrot cries always used against an Opposition leader is that he "has nothing constructive." It is being used now against Mr. Bennett. Unable to defend their own record, and with their program a mosaic of snatchings from Conservative policy, the Government supporters constantly ask: What will Bennett do? Next the Government's failure, Mr. Bennett's program is the least obscure thing in this campaign. The Guardian has published it before, but because of misrepresentation and this stream of talk about "nothing constructive," it may be produced again. Here, therefore, in ten paragraphs, is Mr. Bennett's policy:

EMIGRATION TO UNITED STATES—"There are some things a government may not and cannot do, there are some things over which a government has no control, but there are other matters that profoundly affect the life of a nation which a government should and must do, and their failure to do it constitutes neglect on their part of the interests of the country they govern. . . . The charge I prefer against the King Government is that they failed to recognize and realize that the first duty of the Canadian Government is to provide employment for Canadians in Canada."

UNEMPLOYMENT—"Why is it? The reason is that, instead of making here what we could make in this country by utilizing Canadian energy, brains and money, we have sent out capital abroad to buy goods from other countries and give employment accordingly. . . . What will we do? Just as certainly as I stand here, if we are returned to power on the night of July 23, we propose at the first session of Parliament to amend the fiscal laws so as to give Canadians an equal opportunity in the development of their country under fair competition with their competitors elsewhere in the world. My business and the business of those with whom I may be associated is to see that Canadians are my first consideration."

U. S. TARIFF LEGISLATION—"We are not concerned about legislation against any other country, but for one country, and that country is Canada. We of our party will see to it that no country makes the Canadian tariff except Canada."

BRITISH PREFERENCE—"Let us admit the statements of Mr. King and of Mr. Dunning, that the preference will make Britain more prosperous, and of greater purchasing power. But did Mr. King or Mr. Dunning make any provision to insure that Britain would spend the money in Canada?"

OLD AGE PENSIONS—"We say that if the Federal Government can provide one-half of the old age pensions, it can provide the whole without wrecking the constitution."

RAILROAD POLICY—"It has been said locally that, if the Conservatives come into power, there would be amalgamation of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railways. . . . Amalgamation never; competition ever."

"WAR WITH INDIA"—"Oh, those back door canvasses. How long will they endure? The Canadian people are capable of maintaining peace and public order through the police in their own country, and the Indian people are also capable of maintaining peace and public order in their country."

IMPERIALISM—"I like yourselves, am proud of this country as part of the British Empire, because that Empire respects and protects the rights of minorities, their tongue, their religion, their traditions. But my first duty is to that part of the Empire which is called Canada."

CONSERVATIVE POLICY—"To safeguard Canadian agriculture, Canadian industry, Canadian labor, Canadian health, and to safeguard the Canadian consumer against exploitation."

ISSUE OF JULY 23—"Are we to give a renewed mandate to a Government to increase the money to be sent abroad to buy products which we require for our own support and subsistence; or shall we, by developing Canadian industry and agriculture, offer the opportunity to Canadian farmers and Canadian workmen in Canada to find that employment which is necessary for the development of this country?"

There is nothing indefinite about that. It is a clear, outspoken, specific pronouncement upon every issue and problem of the day; something that all can understand. It only remains to ask, therefore, what is Mr. King's program?
