ZORA
The invisible
By J. R. WILMOT

"And what can I do for—both of you?" he asked, in a low voice.

"Osbert has told me everything he told you," continued Sonia, "and, of course, I realise, as he does, the dangerous position in which he stands. Is it possible that you have not yet taken any further action in the matter—with the police, I mean?"

"That is so," Blayne answered.

"Oh, I am glad," the girl exclaimed, in obvious tone of relief. "I should hate anything to happen to Osbert, and things like that can happen rather easily, can't they, Dr. Blayne?"

"Very easily, I am afraid."

"And am I to assume that you are not convinced that Osbert is guilty?"

Blayne started, perceptibly. He was glad that he had not previously underestimated this girl's mental capabilities, otherwise he might have been even more embarrassed than he was.

"That is rather in the nature of a leading question, don't you think?" he fenced, quickly. "In matters like these, Miss Gaynor, I am not at liberty to divulge the inner workings of my brain. On the other hand I want you to realise that your friend, Mr. Dawyer, is in an exceedingly perilous position. The evidence against him is rather—overwhelming, and, I may add, the authorities at Scotland Yard are inclined to be just a trifle anxious to get this matter cleared up. It does them little credit, you know, to have a case like this left on their hands."

"And they would condemn an innocent person rather than besmirch their reputation in the eyes of the public?"

There was something cruelly commendatory in the girl's tone that made Blayne feel almost microscopic.

"I think you are being unnecessarily apprehensive, Miss Gaynor," he retorted with a ghost of a smile. "Scotland Yard has, as yet, no idea that Mr. Dwyer is so uncomfortably incriminated, and it need not be aware of it unless I tell it so."

"And you are going to tell?"

"On that question I have not yet made up my mind."

"Then I have come to the right person," said Sonia, quietly. "I am glad of that, because I know that you will do what is right. Dr. Blayne," she went on, after a pause, "surely you must realise what this means to me—the humiliation, especially after our last conversation. I have come to you now to plead with you—to plead with you—in the world I really and truly love. I feel that you hold us in the hollow of your hand, but please don't think that I want you to do anything that is against your own conscience. I do want you to believe that Osbert is innocent. Do you really think that I could attempt to shield anyone whom I really imagined was responsible for my father's death. Surely you couldn't think that?"

Blayne felt a sudden stab at his heart. It was as though her words had hurled shot and shell against the castle he had been building in his dreams—the first edifice of love he had ever built. He knew, now, that his dream had been fashioned from gossamer, to be destroyed at the whim and fancy of anyone who cutive times. Of course, there were occasions on which he was defeated but he came back to retrieve his laurels.

In 1920 the Chamber of Mines was moribund. The subscribers elected Frank president, and right away the institution became of practical value to the mining industry of the province. He was president for nine years and, when he was defeated for City Council, the directors persuaded him to become its paid manager.

They made a good choice, all mining men agree, for since then the chamber has been the pivot for much of the mining activity in the province. Frank's biggest coup in the job was put over this spring when he induced several thousand men to go prospecting in the hills of B. C. Not all have made good, but a great many have, and even now, some mighty good looking prospects are being seriously developed. For the first time thousands of young city chaps have become acquainted with the great outdoors. They have learned that it is possible to make a livelihood away from city pavements. Some have gone farming; others are trapping and working at this and that throughout the country, and nearly all who went away on the great trek in the early summer have benefited in health and spirits. Since Frank showed the way, other parts of the continent have followed the union for seven consecutive terms. He called the big strike at Rossland when Whittaker Wright's manipulations brought unrest into Le Roi camp. The strike lasted nine months, and although Frank was sued by mining companies in all courts of the province for damages he and the men went out on his job at the bureau about 8 o'clock, Saturday afternoons he with both men and women, came on to Vancouver about 1903. He was elected alderman in 1911 and had the mountain named after him and has bought several acres of land on it from the government years. At the time of his retirement from City Council he had a chops wood and grows vegetables, record of being elected nine conse-

Stubborn Coughs Ended by Recipe, Mixed at Home

Saves $2. No Cooking! So Easy!

Here is the famous old recipe which millions of housewives have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It takes but a moment to prepare, and costs very little, but it positively has no equal for quick, lasting relief.

From any drugstore, get 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a 16 oz. bottle and fill the bottle with granulated sugar syrup, made with 2 cups of sugar and one cup of water, stirred a few moments until dissolved. No cooking needed—it's so easy! Thus you make 16 ounces of better remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times the cost. It never spoils and children love its taste.

This simple mixture soothes and heals the inflamed throat membranes with surprising ease. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm and eases chest soreness in a way that is really astonishing. Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway Pine, the most reliable healing agent for severe coughs. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

EXECUTORS NOTICE

I have placed the books and accounts of the late J. Renwick Matheson, M. D., in the hands of Miss Lillian Matheson, Springfield for collection. Immediate payment is required to be made to her at her home.

lad of 13 he obtained a reputation as a veterinarian, having a natural aptitude for the work. At 20 he went west and for years afterward worked in all the principal mining camps of Colorado, the British Columbia coast and sections in between.

Frank went to Rossland in 1896. Rossland lured him and presently he graduated from hard rock mining to be secretary of the Miners' Union, a job he held down with distinction to himself and profit to the union for seven consecutive terms. He called the big strike at Rossland when Whittaker Wright's manipulations brought unrest into Le Roi camp. The strike lasted nine months, and although Frank was sued by mining companies in all courts of the province for damages he and the men went out on his job at the bureau about 8 o'clock, Saturday afternoons he with both men and women, came on to Vancouver about 1903. Prominent Islander In Vancouver

The appended clipping is from the Vancouver Province and concerns Frank Woodside, son of the John H. Woodside, Hamilton, P. E. I. He has a plethora of friends and relatives in this part of P. E. I.

He is all that is said about him in this clipping—and more. The writer had the pleasure of meeting him in Vancouver in 1911. He was always willing and ready to help Islanders in Vancouver, or wherever he met them. He opened up the Eton and Clinton districts of Vancouver in the days when real estate sales boomed. He was chairman of the Board of Aldermen in Vancouver for nine years.

NO SHY, RETIRING VIOLET

In days when the cash register was being rung more frequently than in the past three years, the Board of Trade used to go trekking about the province carrying the message of co-operation and goodwill from Vancouver to the hinterland. Those were jovial excursions. Staid city pillars of business sang and cavorted about dance floors and generally acted like Babbitts at their favorite pastime of being good fellows.

On such occasions, invariably, the towering, broad shouldered manager of British Columbia Chamber of Mines, Frank E. Woodside, was to be seen leading the procession. It is the same at mining conventions or gatherings of lodges with which he is affiliated, for Frank is an irrepressible soul.

Frank has passed the half century mark, but never grows old. Neither is he an all time playboy, for none works harder at his job than does he.

Height 6 feet 3 inches, weight 220 pounds and always in best physical trim, Frank Woodside is a human dynamo of energy. At work or play he puts himself into it. He is a moose for work and never tires. Born in Prince Edward Island, the fourth of a family of fourteen boys and girls, Mr. Woodside acquired his greatest asset, good health, working on a farm. As a
