PEOPLE'S THEATRE

There was real merit in the programme placed before the patrons of the People's Theatre last evening. The different screen stories were limned with fine artistic skill.

Marie Walcamp and Wellington Player played the leading roles in a Central African drama, "A Daughter of the Jungle." The story is thrillingly told and the scenes of savage life on the Dark Continent marvellously lifelike, while the encounters with the lion left little to the imagination.

A splendid five-part film, "When we were Twenty-One" in which Daniel Frohman presents the popular Star, William Elliott, in the part of "The Imp." The superb company of screen actors interpreted their various parts with keen sympathy and exquisite art. The story traces the career of "The Imp"—Dick Audaine, who has been beset with an infant charge to "The Trinity" of bachelor friends. The story is taken up twenty years later, when Dick is nearing his majority. He goes astray, falls into the toils of scheming men and is lured into marriage with a female vampire, whom he believes is an angel. The scene in the Corinthian Club, where the "Imp's" paramour, Hirsch, after scooping the pot, seizes the bribe which the Trinity have offered for Dick's release, was a striking one. Dick proclaims the woman as his wife before the world, only to find her turn from him in scorn and fly to her villainous part. The finale sees the tangle unraveled and "The Trinity" in raptures.

"A Mortgage on his Daughter" was a heiter-skelter comedy with some most lugubrious looking types in it. The mirth-provoking trip of the ambulance to the hospital was a funny and clever little bit of film trickery.

"One night I was invited to a dinner party," said an American lady, "and one of the guests was the Turkish Ambassador. He was well informed on every subject, and was one of the most entertaining dinner companions I ever knew."
"Did he wear a fez?" asked her friend.
"No, indeed!" she replied. "He was clean shaven!"

HOSPITAL HIGH TEA.—The ladies who have had charge of the catering in the Market Hall on behalf of the Charlottetown Hospital were kept busy yesterday afternoon attending to the wants of the many visitors who were in town for Dollar Day. All the afternoon the big bell clanged, calling all and sundry to partake of the fare provided. The interior of the Market Hall was beautifully draped with red, white and blue bunting and patriotic flags, and the tables decorated with flowers. The special 25-cent lunch desired at 2 o'clock left nothing to be envied in the way of quantity, quality or variety of eatables. It will be continued all day to-day, and it is to be hoped the efforts of all the ladies connected with this work will be rewarded by a large addition to the depleted funds of this deserving institution.

WHERE'S WHICH.

This conversation was overheard in the corridor of the offices of a large firm. Needless to say, the speakers were lady clerks: "He's given me such a fearful telling-off," said one, "just because I couldn't find him his copy of 'Who's Who.'"
"Poo! don't cry, you little silly. You've got to manage him. When you've been here six weeks, like I have, you'll jolly well tell him to buy a copy of 'Where's Which' and find his old 'Who's Who' himself!"

OF LOCAL INTEREST.—The Boston Advertiser says that the Supreme Court will soon be called upon to take action concerning the suit of Mrs. Lillian M. Glover (now Delemarre) against the Waltham Laundry Co. and Samuel D. Elmore, executor of the estate of her former husband, Clarence F. Glover, who was murdered near his place of business. The death of Winfield S. Slocum, who was appointed by the court to hear and report on the suit, has interrupted Mrs. Glover-Delemarre's Maters. The respondents enjoined from selling 198 shares of the stock of the laundry standing in the name of her former husband, she claiming that on Sept. 22, 1898, under her maiden name Lillian M. LeBlanc, she purchased from Frank T. Simons, for $5,000, a steam laundry in Waltham, and employed Glover to manage it for her.

The ladies of Clifton, New London, will hold a supper in the Hall on Thursday, Oct. 28th in aid of Red Cross work. Preceding the supper will be addresses by Dr. Fullerton, Capt. Campbell and other prominent patriotic speakers. Doors open at 6.30. Addresses to begin at 7. 3631-10-26M2L children 25c.

NO SWINDLE.

You remember selling me some hair-restorer when I called the other day to get shaved, you hoary-headed old thief? roared the indignant customer. "You sold it under false pretences, sir. You said it would restore my head to its original condition." "Well didn't it work?" asked the barber. "Work? No. It's taken off what little hair I used to have, and I am as bald as the pavement now." "That's quite right, sir. No false pretence about that. I said it would restore your head to its original condition, and you know, sir, most of us are born bald."

ORANGE RUST ON BLACKBERRY

This fungous disease appears in the Spring on the under sides of the leaves. It forms there an orange red, or rusty color. The reddish dust which is so easily shaken from the affected leaves is spores. The presence of these colored spores-masses is external evidence that within the stems of the canes, bearing affected leaves, are the feeding threads of the fungus. These threads live in the canes from year to year. Hence it is useless to spray. The only successful way of combating the rust is to prune out and burn all affected plants. Diseased plants are not worth saving for their fruit, and further, they are.

It is no longer a question about owning a sprayer if you are trying to grow fruit; it is just a matter of how to get the best for your means, and it is economy to crowd yourself here. All vacant land not to be planted to staple crops should now be prepared and seeded to cover crops of rye. After early October when it is too late to plant a cover crop of any kind, plow all ground that is not liable to wash during the Winter. Leave the upturned furrows lay in the rough so that the frost can tear them to pieces and ameliorate the soil.

TACT IN THE SICK ROOM.

A number of efficient nurses fail in their work because of lack of tact with a patient. There are certain rules and niceties than anyone, untrained or trained, can and should remember when in a sick room. Exquisite neatness must be observed, as the slightest disorder is often intolerable to the nervous patients. Remember to do all that the patient would wish done in her room, otherwise she will worry about it. Do not leave the medicine bottles, bandages or any paraphernalia of the sick room in sight. They are depressing as well as ugly. Do not insist upon straightening the bed clothes if your patient wishes to be left alone. Do not insist on anything that is unnecessary in the way of attention to regulation, above all, hold it always in your mind that you must study and consider your patients' personality and subdue your own.

HE CEASED BEING A HERO.

I'd read and studied all my life, I felt a sort of hero. I often told the nurses to make us man and wife and now I am a zero.

HE MEANT WELL.

Few Royalties have been harder worked during the war than the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. The Duchess has especially endeared herself to the Canadian owing to the keen interest she has displayed in the welfare of the troops of the overseas dominion. Although no living royal lady is less ceremonious than the Duchess—indeed, her gentility is proverbial—the mere fact that she is royal has sometimes led to amusing results owing to the haughtiness of those who have come into contact with her. Her Royal Highness is fond of telling of a laughable incident which occurred while she was travelling in Egypt. She received a most cordial reception from the people, and in their enthusiasm Egyptian soldiers took the horses out of her carriage and drew it themselves through the streets of Cairo. Later on the Duchess thanked the young officer who commanded them for their kindness, and said: "I should think it should have been very heavy for them to carry." The officer was extremely kind in talking to a British royalty, and for a moment he could not find words to reply. "Oh dear no," he stammered at last nervously—"at least not heavier than the gun they are accustomed to carry." The Duchess learnt afterwards that the gun in question weighed half a ton.—Scottish American.

THE "MAGIC" OF KHAKI.

(From the London Advertiser.) Eastern romances tell of a magic cloak which possessed wondrous transforming qualities. It made a prince of the peasant, a hero of the modest, gave beauty to the ugly and learning to the ignorant. Some such wizardly appears to be in the fibre of khaki. Have we not seen countless cases within the last year where it has placed dignity about the frivolous, replaced meanness with maleness, given distinction where the commonplace formerly existed? Many a lad who because of mental occupation he ignored or treated patronizingly, now holds our sincere respect and admiration. The khaki sends a man's shoulders back and his head up, mentally and physically. It gives him what we for lack of a better term call "class." War tends to level all, yet putting on the khaki places a man in that splendidly exclusive set which plays the chief and most heroic part in the conflict. Put on the khaki and step up a-mongst the elect.

Don't Forget!

Tea and coffee contain the drug, caffeine—from 1 1/2 to 3 grains to the average cup.

Some people use tea or coffee for years and either forget or don't know that caffeine is a cumulative poison, working away in the system, insidiously undermining and destroying health.

Some of the signs are headache, heart flutter, sleeplessness, biliousness, and various stomach, kidney and liver trouble.

Of course, if one prefers his tea and coffee, and is willing to put up with these "comforters," why—keep right on!

But, if one values health and real comfort, and at the same time would enjoy a delicious, wholesome beverage, the thing to do is to quit both tea and coffee and use
