EXPANDING WORK

The Government had encountered great difficulties in the illness of the Premier, the death of the Minister of Public Works, and through fire losses, but in less than a year it had replaced the college building.

The sole object was to enable boys and girls of Prince Edward Island to obtain the education so necessary in the world today.

The term "extravagance" had been advanced in some places, but the arguments were so feeble and so futile that they were beneath notice. Anyone with an eye to the future would have a proper argument if the Government had failed to provide for what the future evidently required. The college was built for the present as was necessary, and also for the future.

Fourth Year

With a desire to provide for the students' further education in their native province, the Government had added a Fourth Year to the college courses.

The chief concern of the Government was to train teachers, and it was hoped that the class going out today was better than its predecessors, because, as teachers they would be subjected to ever increasing criticism. It was to be hoped that their conduct in the schools would be as worthy of approbation as it had been in College.

Principal's Address

Principal Robertson in opening his annual address, first gave a word of welcome to the visitors.

The staff was bringing before the public the seventy-third graduating class. Seventy-three years ago the people, by an Act of Legislature, established Prince of Wales College to provide an education in mathematics, arts, and philosophy in order that pupils of this province should not have to seek in other lands for education. Prince of Wales College was established in what had been Central Academy. There, with a staff of one teacher, later two, their labours were carried on for a few years, and it became necessary to increase the staff to five. In February, 1900, the old institution was vacated and the classes moved into the second Prince of Wales College building. There, until February, 1932, a prosperous work was carried on.

The institution might be compared to a nautilus, which passed into the present building in this year. It would be with pride that present class would realize that it was the first to graduate from the new building. Happy memories would continue for those who attended classes in both buildings. The students would remember the spacious corridors and rooms, the linoleum on the floors, the laboratories. All these would be the standards for other buildings throughout the province. The college had 335 first year students, a number as large as previou total enrollments. There were 127 in second year, and 37 in third year. The staff had been doing its best to satisfy the Government in the work of teaching.

Teaching Staff

The institution had been ministered to by sixteen teachers. Added this term were Mr. L. W. Shaw in the teacher training department, and Mr. J. G. Patterson.

Prince of Wales College seemed fortunate in being able to retain permanently the new teachers who were added to the staff from time to time.

Principal Robertson paid a tribute to the members of the teaching staff, who, he stated, were closely attached to their work, and who showed their interest both in classroom performance and in preparation. The forenoons were spent in the classroom and the afternoons in preparation. It was a pleasure to work with such a faithful group of teachers. He also paid a high tribute to Dr. Steel as Vice-principal, remarking that a large part of the success of the College was attributable to his faithful and unfailing attention to duty. Dr. Robertson appreciated all that Dr. Steel meant to the institution. When the honour was recently conferred on him, none felt more pleasure than did the speaker. He knew that he spoke for the whole staff when he congratulated Dr. Steel on receiving the LL.D.

Student Body

Regarding the student body, the Principal stated that any remarks he might make in this connection would be but repetition of what he had said of former classes. In general the student body was characterized by attention to work, and honourable conduct in decorum. Discipline was no difficulty, as the students maintained discipline with only the occasional individual problem, which were dealt with by the students themselves.

In the work the principle of dividing the year into three terms had been followed with marked success, in that it had been possible to arrange the subjects in order that there might be a greater concentration on work, greater class study, and more frequent examinations, with the result that students might reduce the burden of work carried.

When, this Spring, an epidemic of measles went through the College, a great deal of difficulty was eliminated, as the second term examinations had just been written. In the granting of certificates, the credentials of the students and the records of the teachers were thus available.

Teacher Training

Mr. L. W. Shaw had taken up the work of Teacher Training. It had not been possible to give increased time to the subject, but Mr. Shaw was closely associated with Mr. Irlam in the Physical Training Class. In this class the individual work of the student was demanded, as the student was required to take control of the group. Excellent training was given in this way, as the problem of the school was the physical control of classes and teachers. Mr. Shaw expected great results from the work with Mr. Irlam.

In the Commerce Department, forty-five students were enrolled. Despite difficulties in classification and increased duties of the staff, good work had been done.

In biology department, an extra subject had been added, as laboratory facilities had been available. For many years the subject had been taught in elementary form. Mr. Duchemin, who was well qualified taught the subject.

Students' Classes

First year students had been divided into nine classes, which demanded a tremendous amount of attention from teaching staff. The class was a body of excellent material. Those who stood at the top of the class were no mean students. In the Commerce Class of second year, there was a body of thirteen graduates. In the second year class there was a body of students of which forty-seven attained 65%, and a large number who had attained more than 60%. In Third Year there were thirty-seven members

The senior class, which was a most worthy one was the largest in the history of the institution and one of the best ever sent out. Heretofore, one high honour diploma had been granted every two or three years, but never before had three been granted at one Convocation. The fact was due to the presence in the class of two representatives of the Cullen family, and to Mr. Alfred Linkletter, who won the Anderson Gold Medal.

Addressed Parents

Hon. G. Shelton Sharp, Minister of Public Works, in addressing the parents present, remarked that all must be pleased with the conclusion of the year's work, as all had made sacrifices that the students might have education, to take their places in the life of the country.

The government had tried to interpret the wishes of the people of the province in the building of the college, and it had increased expenditures on public health and education as it was believed that in the health and education of the people lay the successful future of the country.

The Government rejoiced in the attainments of the students, and hoped that many would continue to the end of Fourth Year, as it was believed that the courses could be taken more cheaply here than on the mainland.

The third year class was the largest ever to graduate, and had a fine college record. The students were going out better equipped than when they came to college. In closing, Mr. Sharp expressed the hope that the students would continue their scholastic pursuits and make Canada the greatest country in the British Empire.

Dr. Robertson in thanking the students for the expressions in the valedictory, exhorted them to keep up courage in the assurance of a more glorious future. He announced that there would be a short course for candidates for First Class Teachers' licenses, beginning on Monday next. The students who had fallen behind in more than two subjects would be privileged to attend classes beginning on Monday next in order that they might complete the work of the present session or prepare for the work of the next.

He urged all who required the work to make the further sacrifice of continuing the course.

Notable Year

Mr. H. H. Shaw, Chief Superintendent of Education, in opening his address, remarked that when the historian of the future came to write the history of education in this province the present year would be most notable. Those who had come through the experience, and were close to it, would not realize the importance of the period. The courage displayed by the Government in putting up the college in a time of difficulty would be long remembered. The long view was taken rather than the short one.

There were those who would have said as had Garfield, that the best principle of education was "Mark Hopkins on one end of the log and a student on the other." In this connection Mr. Shaw quoted the following article:

The definition of a college as "Mark Hopkins at one end of a log and a student at the other" has often been quoted, both as a protest against mass education and as an excuse for doing without needed equipment. But the original statement, Professor William B. Munroe says in the December Atlantic Monthly, was a plea for good teaching. James A. Garfield, speaking at a Williams College alumni banquet in 1871, followed an orator who dwelt at length on the need for new buildings at the college. Mr. Garfield, however, thought that funds for the faculty were of more importance. What he actually said was this:

"I am not willing that this discussion should close without mention of the value of a true teacher. Give me a log hut, with only a simple bench, Mark Hopkins at one end and I at the other, and you may have all the buildings, apparatus, and libraries without him."

As Professor Munro points out: "What impressed Garfield was the caliber of the man who sat at the professor's desk. And that is where more emphasis should be placed by the colleges today, for there is no substitute for men in the process of education."

This was a plea for good teaching rather than for great equipment.

What impressed Garfield was the calibre of the men at the desk.

Mr. Shaw congratulated Dr. Steel on receiving the degree of LL.D. He hoped that next year Miss Seaman, who had a notable record of service would have similar honours conferred on her. He had been long associated with the teachers and was proud to testify as to their ability.

Tribute To Staff

Mr. Shaw paid a high tribute to the teaching staff of the College and remarked that they were not being attracted by openings in the outside world. A few nights ago at a meeting of the Board, the College was given the privilege of carrying a fourth year, and thus becoming a junior college.

Junior College

The five functions of the junior college were outlined by Mr. Shaw who quoted the following:

The Commission of Seven of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, in its report on "State Higher Education in California," June 1932, includes this statement:

The Commission recommends that it be the policy of the State Board of Education to recognize that the system of junior-college education may properly include groups of functions or services, five in number, as follows:

(1) Curriculum for social intelligence—A curriculum devised to give the student about to complete his general education a unitary conception of our developing civilization. This curriculum should be provided in all institutions offering education on a junior-college level. It should be the most important curriculum, inasmuch as it aims to train for social citizenship in American civilization.

(2) Specialized vocational curriculums—A group of specialized vocational curriculums more advanced than those offered in the high school aimed to care for the needs of those registrants who will probably soon terminate their schooling to enter the occupations.

(3) Preprofessional curriculums—A group of preprofessional courses, preparatory to university professional courses, the nature of which is legitimately determined by professional-school requirements of the university. Such a group of courses properly parallels work given in the lower division of the university, the more flexibility and experimentation should be encouraged than is now the case.

(4) Preacademic curriculums—A group of curriculums preparatory to university concentration in one or more of a group of arts, sciences, and literatures, provided by the senior colleges to give an advanced education in some phase of civilization for avocational or civic purposes, or provided as preprofessional preparation for advanced work leading to a professional career of scholarship in research or teaching.

(5) Adult education—The function of adult education may well be associated with the junior college as a supplementary service. It concerns not the regular fulltime student body but the citizens of the community, both men and women, who have terminated their formal schooling and wish to advance their selfeducation with the stimulus, direction, and aid which the present-day organization of adult or extension education provides. Junior colleges are local or community institutions and may well be cultural community centers.

The college should be more than a preparatory school for higher education. Adult education would be the big thing of the future.

At the present time there was a great over-production of teachers. Three hundred new teachers were going out, and at the present time all schools were filled. Where were the students to go, Mr. Shaw asked. Fortunately the provincial public library was about to be established, and those who remained at home could, by means of books carry on the work of the University, and eventually merely write examinations.

There were some who were carrying on work privately, a commendable practice. The speaker hoped that all might persevere, and not remain at the stage now reached.

Use of Leisure

people will have more leisure time than in the past. In the last hundred years there was a greater development of power than in all the preceding ages. Thus the work of the world would be done by fewer people in less time. What was to be done with leisure?

Mr. Wells had said that civilization was a race between education and disaster. More attention to music and art, the cultural things was advocated by the speaker. These were the actual realities. All that remained of Greece was its wonderful architecture, and of the Middle and Dark Ages, the architecture alone has survived.

Dr. Robertson voiced the pleasure and satisfaction of the audience on Mr. Shaw's address. Speaking a word of encouragement to the students, he advised them to continue on in their education. The more education one got and the more humanized one became, the more one would be concerned over the problems of human life.

He urged the parents to inspect the building after the exercises were completed.

Hon. Dr. MacMillan stated that it was a great pleasure to see so many parents present, as it was an indication of the interest they were taking in the College.

The college staff was an excellent one. It was a pleasure for the speaker, a few days ago, to present Prof. G. D. Steel for his LL.D. The speaker thought it was his duty to be present on the occasion. It was a great pleasure to see so many boys and girls from Prince Edward Island on the list of successful students of a great educational institution, a great evidence of what the province, and the College were doing.

He urged the students to go on with their education, as when the appointment of a professor for the college was necessary, it was sometimes necessary to go outside the province for one.

Announcement was made that on July 2 or 3 the McGill Library School would begin its course in the college. At the school, librarians, teachers, all interested, would have the opportunity of attending classes. Throughout the course, lectures would be given free each night. At the present time some thousands of books had been purchased by the McGill Library staff for this province. Next month the scene of activity would be changed to Charlottetown and soon the people of the Province would have the opportunity of taking advantage of library facilities.
