Winnipeg City Mosquito-Free

WINNIPEG, Aug. 7 — (C. P.) — Winnipeg death dealers have just completed the decimation of every mosquito within a radius of five miles from the centre of the city and cut to a minimum the possibility of any of the pests hatching for the rest of the summer.

Nearly $5,000 was spent this year by the Anti-Mosquito Campaign, sponsored by the Board of Trade. Gangs of unemployed men, captained by trained inspectors, spread a rain of death in the form of 1,000 gallons of a mixture of fuel oil and cresylic acid over 30,000 acres of sloughs. A coating one-fiftieth of an inch thick will kill the "wrigglers"—young biters — when they rise to the surface, which they must do every 20 minutes in order to breathe.

Campaigners are confident few mosquitoes in the area covered survived the killing. And although mosquitoes have been known to drift with the wind as far as six miles, the city should be practically free from the pests because the female will not lay her eggs where oil is spread during the same season.

Spreading gangs drive into shallow sloughs on low wagons carrying drums of oil and spreaders with hip waders cover the area with two-gallon pneumatic sprays attached to their backs. Jack Tully, field manager of the campaign and the Dominion entomologist at Nanaimo, B. C., comes to Winnipeg to work on the campaign during his holidays. His wooden leg marks him as a veteran "campaigner." He lost his own first year when an oil truck rolled over it in a spill.

As soon as the frost is out of the ground for a few inches, Tully directs his scouts on their tramps of inspection. Their training enables them to spot sloughs where the "wrigglers" are furthest developed and there the campaign begins. Unless rain intervenes the work must be done in eight days, the period of growth between hatching and flying.

The city's environs are very flat. The total rise and fall within a 10 mile radius is less than 10 feet. In wet seasons as much as 90,000 acres of stagnant water used to breed swarms of mosquitos that made outdoor sport almost unbearable. Success of the campaign, it's sponsors believe, is attested by the continued voluntary support which keeps it going each year.

LARGE NON-OFFICIAL BUILDING

(Canadian Press) STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 8—

One of the largest non-official buildings in Sweden containing the offices, storerooms and manufacturing plants of the Co-operative Consumers' Union has now been completed in the southern part of Stockholm. It is an ultra-modernistic structure built of steel, concrete, brick and glass with a front length of about 350 feet. Besides the large offices and store-rooms the building contains an up-to-date heating, cooling and power plant, and the total power consumed within the building is about 1,200 horsepower supplying energy for 290 motors for various purposes.

The house further contains a meat plant designed to convert 60,000 kilograms of meat a day and employing 250 workmen, a coffee roasting plant claimed to be the most modern one of its kind in Europe with a roasting capacity of 30,000 kilos of coffee per day. There also is a department for the storing and distribution of vegetables on a large scale, a smoking plant for meat, and a garage for 80 motor lorries.

Preservation Of Rural England

MANCHESTER, England, Aug. 8 — (C.P.)—The question of preserving rural Lancashire is engaging the attention of public-spirited people, led by Lord Derby, at whose request representatives of public bodies in Lancashire met on July 7 and considered the matter. It was decided to set up a Lancashire county branch of the Council for the Preservation of Rural England.

The establishment of such a county branch in Lancashire, Lord Derby states, "would, it is believed, greatly strengthen the hands of the local authorities with whom responsibility for regional and local planning rests, and their plans would be made more effective if supported by an informed public opinion. A representative body of those interested in the county would be able to assist and cooperate in preserving those beauties and amenities which still remain in many parts of the county."

Generals Take Charge

(Financial Post)

The proposed industrial recovery code in the United States is a voluntary effort but in reality the particular forces of compulsion that are being utilized to insure universal acceptance of the New Idea conception of hours of work, rates of wages, and codes of business fair-play are more powerful than any statutory penalties could possibly be. In Washington the same machinery that was used to put across the war time Liberty bond and enlistment campaigns is running full steam to sloganize and persuade American industrialists to sign up to a man in the Nira effort. The regimentation of industry is being accomplished by a psychological persuasion that is more relentless and unbending than compulsion by law. The sort of officially unrecognized but officially activated campaign of bull-dozing that has kept the negroes in subjection in the South for seventy years and that put the wheat pool over in Saskatchewan, is under full steam.

The United States has gone to war; the enemy is depression. The generals are in command. People accept as inevitable in wartime a type of dictatorship and mass prejudice that is normally repulsive to the free man who prefers to call his soul his own. So let us not be too hard on the men who are trying to put the Rooseveltian doctrine into execution. If they succeed in accomplishing their objectives the temporary eclipse of individualism may turn out to have been worth while.

All the bitten animals have been killed by order of the veterinary surgeon. The five human victims have been hurriedly taken to the Pasteur Institute at Lille, for it is feared that the rabbit was suffering from rabies.

Mme. Lefebvre bought the rabbit, an exceptionally strong and healthy looking animal, at a neighboring market. She was carrying it home when it suddenly knocked away the lid of her basket, and bit her. When she reached her house the rabbit escaped, and, bounding round the kitchen, bit Lefebvre, his son and two daughters in succession, and then set upon the family pet. The rabbit was at length captured and consigned to the hen run. There it started biting every chicken and duck it could find.

PARIS, Aug. 7—Hedgehog velvet, a new fabric—black velvet interwoven with white hair—was introduced by the famous house of Worth at its fall and winter fashion show today.

Fur waistscoats under velvet quilts of satin suits also were displayed. Favorite furs were Alaska seal, salongor, wolf, black fox and panther.

The type of agriculture in Western Canada is essentially that of the production of spring-seeded cereals.

Children suffering from worms soon show the symptoms, and the mother can detect the presence of these parasites by the writhings and fretting of the child. Until expelled and the system cleared of them the child cannot regain its health. Miller's Worm Powders are prompt and efficient, not only for the eradication of worms, but also as a toner up for children that are run down in consequence.
