THE CHEERFUL VIEW.

There is scarcely a question that can present itself to the human mind in regard to which some men and women will not form diverse, if not opposite opinions. When Henry Ward Beecher came to preach his father's funeral sermon he took the cheerful view that the failed eyesight, dulled hearing, stiffened limbs and impaired faculties of the aged are comparable to so much baggage packed away in preparation for the last journey. And now, to add another to the many views and opinions regarding the Martinique disaster, we notice a letter in an exchange, said to have been written by a very estimable lady, which takes a superficially cheerful view of what has been generally thought to be an appalling disaster.

Her argument is briefly that all the people who were so suddenly destroyed must have died at some time, one by one; that most of them would have suffered much both in apprehension and in real pain; their friends would have sorrowed and followed them in sadness to the grave and diverse sad consequences would have resulted to children deprived of their parents, wives of their husbands and so on. She conceives that the antithesis of all this really occurred:

At one fell stroke, with one touch, the Almighty laid his hand upon Martinique, and it was done. And how quietly and mercifully! No mothers weeping over dead babes, no children straying hand in hand seeking for father and mother, no distracted husbands and wives turning over dead or wounded bodies in frantic haste and wild fear, no shrieks of horror at awful discoveries—none, in short, of the inevitable accompaniments of a great railway disaster, a fire, or a flood. The summons came, and the multitude yielded up the spirit to Him who gave it. And what more tranquil death could they die? How more readily and expeditiously make the journey from one land to the other?

This is what may be called the cheerful view of the case. And we confess that we think it a better view than that which saw in the Martinique disaster, only the vengeance of an angry God smiting another Sodom. But there are obvious difficulties in the way of fully accepting this bright and hopeful view of the city's sudden overthrow. For if such instant blasting by the volcano's sulphurous breath was a good thing for Martinique, why not also for the entire world? And if for the world, were it not better that it had not been created? Thus the so-called cheerful view, if the line of vision is extended far enough, ends in the darkness and shadows of illimitable night. That way of looking upon the world's tragedies is after all, not a cheerful but a morbid one.

Tennyson in a morbid mood asked, Were it not better not to be? And Job in his great afflictions wished to be hidden in the grave. But the sound mind in a sound body and in healthy mood feels always the joy of living and knows that this life is a good thing, despite its cares and troubles. In the cases cited the persons named only took a cheerful view of death because in their peculiar circumstances and for the time their views of life were morbid. The truly cheerful view of the disasters that from time to time befall the world lies in taking note of the fact that so many millions are exempt from them. More than three fourths of the habitable world are exempt from the horrors of earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. Let us be thankful that Canada is among the happy exemptions. There is much sorrow and misery in the world, but a large proportion of it is self-imposed. There is a great deal of happiness and genuine healthful enjoyment among the myriads of earth's people who delight in living.

To live virtuously, joyfully, hopefully to be more ready to number our enjoyments than our miseries, to look persistently on the bright side of things in this life and yet be prepared for its inevitable ending; to make the most and the best of life for the real good of ourselves and our fellows,—this is the true philosophy of life.

The war in South Africa has been called "Chamberlain's War." Perhaps the phrase hardly does him justice, for, after all, the peace which has happily followed is as much his as was the war. Kitchener has well done all that the military arm of the public service could do, to bring about the present hopeful condition of affairs in South Africa. But a greater work remains yet to be done in the way of constructive statesmanship. The problem is how to use the now unchallenged British supremacy in South Africa with the minimum of friction and the maximum of result in the pacification and development of the country. It is a problem worthy of the brain and heart of the greatest man in the world. It is, we think most fortunate that at such a time we have a Colonial Secretary at once so energetic and broad-minded as Mr. Chamberlain, and doubly so that he approaches the task on the lines of conciliation marked out in Lord Kitchener's address to the Boers at Pretoria. The Colonial Secretary has now the opportunity of his life, and we trust and believe he will prove equal to it.

MISSIONARIES IN IMMINENT DANGER

PEKIN, July 31.—Doctor Canright, the American missionary, has telegraphed Mr. Conger that the missionaries in Szechuen have made repeated demands upon the Chinese authorities for protection without result; that massacres of native Christians and the destruction of their property continue daily and that the missionaries themselves are in imminent danger.

Frequent Throbbing Headache.

There's many a cause for headache. Men are not often troubled by headaches. When they are it is generally due to biliousness or indigestion. But women have headaches which seem peculiar to their sex, frequent nervous throbbing headaches. Does it not seem as if such headaches peculiar to women must be at once related to womanly disease? Women who suffer with diseases peculiar to the sex do not realize the drain of vital strength and nerve force they undergo as a consequence of disease. It is this which causes the familiar headaches of sick women.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures such headaches by curing the cause—irregularity, weakening drains, inflammation, ulceration or female weakness. "Favorite Prescription" invigorates and tones up the entire system, encourages the appetite, quiets the nerves and gives refreshing sleep. "I was troubled with congestion of the uterus and female weakness for five years," writes Mrs. Robt. Kerwin, of Albert, Hastings Co., Ont. "Was so weak and nervous I could hardly do any work. Had severe pain in back, also dizziness and pain in head. My heart would beat so hard and fast at times I would have to sit still till I got all right again. But after taking four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and one of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' I felt entirely well. I also used one box of Lotion Tablets and one of 'Suppositories' as directed. All the symptoms of my trouble have disappeared and I am completely cured. I thank you for your kind advice and your medicine." Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets clear the complexion and sweeten the breath.
