BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

OTHERS HEAR
 With Man or animal or bird The silent tongue is never heard. —Old Mother Nature.
 A few folks know and heed this saying of Old Mother Nature's, but all too many don't know it, or have forgotten it. Anyway, they do not heed it. Noisy and unruly tongues are the world's worst trouble-makers, not only for their possessors but also for their neighbors. Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel and Chatterer the Red Squirrel are cousins. Everybody knows this. They are forever quarreling, as everybody also knows. If there is nothing to quarrel about they quarrel anyway. Some folks are like that. Quarreling seems to be a curious form of pleasure with them.

This bright, cool, lovely morning in the late fall Happy Jack had remembered something that until now had slipped his mind. To say a thing has slipped your mind doesn't sound nearly as bad as to say you forgot it. Slippery-minded folks seldom admit they are forgetful, although the results are the same. Folks are queer that way. What Happy Jack now remembered was that in the spring when he had wandered some distance from home he had found an oak tree more heavily blossomed than any of the oak trees near home. Oh yes, oak trees have blossoms or there would be no acorns. Certainly not. Many blossoms then should mean many acorns now. Happy Jack set off for that tree in high spirits. He hoped no one else had found it.

Now that very morning the very same thing had happened to Chatterer the Red Squirrel. He had remembered that very same tree and the blossoms he had seen on it in the spring. So he, too, went an early start for that tree. Because he lived a little nearer to it he got there first. Right away he discovered that there were many acorns as the blossoms had promised. Some were still on the tree. More were on the ground. And he could not see that any one had been there ahead of him. "Mine. All mine, every one of them," gloated Chatterer, and hugged himself.

Contract Bridge
 By Josephine Culbertson
CRUEL FATE
 Perhaps the worst thing to be said against duplicate bridge is that legitimate boldness, either in the bidding or the play, is often punished severely rather than rewarded. Observe this sad case:
 South, dealer.
 Neither side vulnerable.
 Match-point duplicate.
 ♠ Q 6 5
 ♥ K Q J 10 8
 ♦ K 9 5
 ♣ A 9 8 7 4 3
 ♠ A 10 8 8
 ♥ 7 5 3 2
 ♦ Q J 6 4 3
 ♣ A 7
 This was the bidding at every table:
 South West North East
 1 ♠ 2 ♥ 3 ♠ 4 ♠
 2 ♠ Pass 4 ♠ Pass
 3 ♠ Pass
 Every West opened the heart king, and at seven of the eight tables continued with the heart ace or queen. After that the various declarer merely gave up a trick to the trump king and could claim the balance.
 One West however, tried to defeat the four-spade contract. He shifted at the second trick to his singleton diamond. Then, when declarer played to the spade ace and returned a spade toward dummy, this West put up the spade king and underled his remaining heart hon., his hope being to find East would return would, of course, let West ruff for the setting trick.
 In view of the fact that there was a fifty per cent chance that East held the heart jack were so minor a card would not have affected the bidding one way or the other — this particular West deserved better luck! A fifty per cent chance to defeat the contract was surely worthwhile, even at duplicate, when the cost could be no more than thirty points if the play went wrong. The Goddess of Chance, however, can be perverse as well as fickle, and in this case imagination and boldness were punished by a "bottom on the board."
