

Why Is It?

There are a few regular occasions on which every pretty girl feels inclined to give vent to her feelings by a "good cry."

To take up the question of forlorn beauty. Why is it? A man who is good-looking must admire beauty. He does not care for it; he cannot help himself.

The answer may best be found in the letters of twelve intelligent men on the subject of choosing a wife. Each one looked seriously what qualities he would look for in a possible partner, and set them down in order, the most important first, the less important following.

Morgan. Dr. Parkin would not discuss that, but there were many on board who believed that he has interested the great American financier in his scheme.

"It is a great scheme, because it allows the young man to save for himself what he can of his allowance, and a thrifty young man ought to get along at Oxford on much less than $1,500 a year.

The Bills Just Balanced.

Many a man-in-print—has paid for Christian Science treatment with imaginary checks, but it has remained for a Christian Science healer to put a similar device into actual practice.

"There's nothing the matter with your teeth," said the dentist. "You only think there is."

But the healer, ignoring the remark, sat down in the chair and winced and moaned, "even as you and I." There was a good deal the matter, so that before her series of appointments was over a bill of $50 had mounted up against her.

It Couldn't be Worse.

Mrs. Mellem is one of those inoffensive persons who are continually dreading that they may, by some mischance, hurt the feelings of others.

"John," she said to the man-servant, on the morning following the party, "do you happen to know whether—that is—I mean, can you find out, without asking the cook, whether the tinned salmon was all eaten last night? You see, I don't wish to ask her because she may have eaten it, and then she would feel uncomfortable," added the good soul.

"If you please, ma'am," replied the man, "the new cook has eaten the tinned salmon; and if you was to say anything to her you couldn't make her more uncomfortable than she is."
