BREAD! the people's cry

When people must have a thing, they will have it, even at the cost of revolution.

Cobden and Bright saved England from a threatened revolution by obtaining a repeal of the "Corn Laws" that resulted in a tax on bread.

No country can with safety place an essential beyond the reach of all its people; and bread is a vital necessity to everyday living.

Bread is the food of all nourishment, unequalled in food-value by any other food on the market at any price.

Bread causes growth in children, gives endurance for work and zest for pleasure, prolongs youth and supplies resistance to disease in those of later years.

STEWART'S BREAD

contains every ingredient to make it a perfect nourishing food. By substituting it for the more expensive foods the same food-value is maintained and a surprising economy is effected.

OTTAWA AND PARRY SOUND WARMEST SPOTS IN CANADA

OTTAWA, Aug. 21—Parry Sound and Ottawa share the distinction of being the warmest spots on the map of Canada in the past 24 hours, according to the temperatures registered at the meteorological stations.

Those two places had temperatures of 88 yesterday, while Toronto went only as high as 84. London and Montreal were up to 80. But out in Alberta it was comparatively cool with temperatures around 70, and Manitoba a little warmer.

There has been unsettled weather in the west, with heavy rains not just the best kind of harvest weather.

Toronto and vicinity are to get a continuation of the fine and warm weather we have been having.

The lowest mercury mark in Toronto last night was 62 and at 8 o'clock today it had risen to 74. At noon it was up to 80 and steadily advancing.

Lions Succumb To Bows And Arrows

Dr. Saxton Pope, Stewart Edward White and the other adventurers who went to South Africa to prove the efficacy of arrows upon lions report that they are having good sport. Their bows have done all that was expected of them, but they admit that they do not work out very well against a charge of a pack of lions. They will inflict fatal injuries, but they will not stop. This was a point raised some years ago by a British officer when discussing the use of automatic pistols against warring Indian tribesmen. He stuck to the heavier revolver with its larger bullet and lower penetrating power for he found that while the automatic would send a bullet through a man it would not knock him down, and even after he had been fatally shot he might live long enough to kill his enemy. So it is, with the bows. Dr. Pope tells of being charged by eight lions, and at the last moment found it advisable to let loose his heavy artillery, reserving the bow for more formal occasions. To be charged by a galloping, grunting deadly lion, he says, is exhilarating especially when one has the feeling of security given by modern explosives and rifle protection. One can then stand and snap the camera, confident that at the necessary moment the lion will drop with a bullet in a vital spot.

Man Against Lion

In his last despatch to the New York World, written while he waited for a lion near a water hole, Dr. Pope hints at a supreme adventure he and his companions may indulge in. He reports that two years ago a man named Klein acting for the movies brought a small band of African natives, the Nandi, for the purpose of hunting lions. Ten of these men attacked and killed with their spears three charging lions on their shields and man recorded the proceedings. The hunters were nude except for their head-dresses. Each was armed with a spear, a throwing knife and a bull-skin shield. They received the charging lions on their shields and thrust their spears through them, one after another, and with no more apprehension, apparently than an expert woodsman would feel when felling a big tree. This, as the doctor says wistfully, is real sport and he adds: "We would do this if we had the numbers and the requisite practice, for the white man can do what any man can do and usually does it better. Gladly would we risk injury for the thrill of such a triumph." Getting the necessary practice we imagine would provide enough thrills to last the average white man the rest of his perhaps not-too-long-protracted life.

The hunters know now that the arrow is adequate for slaying the king of beasts. It has also an advantage over the rifle in one important respect; the lion will fight the arrow that has wounded him. He will tear at it with his teeth and thus give the archer a chance to send a second shot if this is necessary. He says: "I have an undeveloped film in my knapsack, a picture of a lion rearing rampant and striking with his heavy muscled arm at my white arrow in his forehead. In that very attitude my companion, Arthur Young, shooting at sixty-five yards, drove another arrow into his heart and killed him. The lion's last gasp was with low-lav in the long grass of the veldt and lay lashing his tail and muttering threats, some sixty-five yards off. This is good shooting range for our bows. The heavy hunting arrows travel nearly point blank at this distance. So we started it on him. After a flight of two or three hundred yards he began hitting him. As he was struck by one arrow then another he lunged at the offending shaft and ground it in his teeth. He even bounded out a short way to seize and destroy them. Later when he was dead, we found the feathered ends of two in his throat where he had tried to swallow them."

Pope Receives British Teachers

(Canadian Press) MONTREAL, QUE., Aug. 21 - While in the city Mrs. E. M. Marshall, C. B. E., a writer accompanying the British teachers touring the Dominion, said: "I took 81 Canadian girls to call upon the Pope last year. This great man, with his learned and kind face, spoke to each visitor as a teacher to a teacher. Princess Louise is another person who is much interested in the interchange of teachers. When she wished us a very pleasant trip she said she had never forgotten the happy times she had enjoyed in Canada."

Study Gall Bladders

This particular lion was nearly 400 pounds in weight and nine feet in length. As a surgeon, Dr. Pope performs an autopsy on all the animals killed, and at the request of a surgeon at the Mayo clinic in making a comparative study of the gall ducts all the African mammals that fall under his observation, hoping thus to gain knowledge that may aid medical science in the problem of gall bladder surgery. He reports the hide of lions as extremely tough and says that often an arrow goes diagonally through the body and without piercing it, the power of an arrow is well illustrated in the case of a lion shot at the heart. This arrow entered at the scapular, clove through the heavy muscles in this region without striking bone and entered the chest wall by cutting in two the second rib. He reports having seen a Springfield rifle stopped by no greater resistance and lodged harmlessly in the flesh. As the animals are shot they are skinned on the field and the scientists report themselves tormented by the swarms of lion flies that assail them. They cling and bite ferociously and even when caught are hard to kill. When these pests are shaken off and the lion's hide hoisted on their shoulders they are invaded by myriads of little black ticks which desert the dead lion and seek to attach themselves to the victors.

PROBABLY MORE SO

The following story told at the recent convention of the National Retail Hardware Association, got a big laugh. "An old fellow down our way," said the teller, "brought a load of produce into market. Receiving a higher price than he had expected, he decided to surprise his wife; so he bought himself a new outfit—clothes, hat shoes and all. He put them under the seat of his wagon and on his way home, stopped by a river to change clothes.

Deciding his old clothes were useless, he threw them in the river. When he took under the seat, he found the new clothes were missing.

"He scratched his head for a moment, then climbed aboard the wagon and said: 'Get up, Maud, we'll surprise her anyhow!'"

"What's that girl doing with a tobacco pouch?"

"Tobacco pouch, indeed! That's her bathing bag."
