Combines Humor "Speak Easily" And Fast Action

Hilarious antics . . . high-speed action . . . and a host of beautiful chorus girls provide excellent entertainment in "Speak Easily," Buster Keaton and Jimmy Durante's "Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer" comedy which opened yesterday at the Prince Edward Theatre.

The two comedians sent the audience into screams of laughter at their mad-cap antics during a wild theatrical venture in New York City. Keaton portrays the millionaire college professor who finances the show and Durante is Jimmy, the eccentric piano player who is his companion through the venture.

The two comedians are assisted in their antics by Ruth Selwyn, sparking in the feminine lead as Fanny Feet, small-time chorus girl, and Thelma Todd, who exercises her alluring blonde wiles on Buster and "Economic" with devastating effects. Ronda Ripper scoots in a "maniac" role as Mrs. Pease, jealous guardian of Fanny, and Lawrence Grant is convincing as Dr. Bolton. The balance of the cast who capably fill their roles includes Sidney Toler as the stage manager, Sydney Toler has appeared in Charlottetown many times some years ago.

Thrills Galore In New Buck Jones Picture

Buck Jones came to the screen of the Capitol Theatre yesterday in "Hello Trouble," a Columbia Western film crammed with enough riding, shooting and fighting thrills for a dozen pictures. The picture is one of the best of the consistently good action-films Jones has made, and, for that matter, ranks among the best Westerns this reviewer ever has seen.

"Hello Trouble" has a strong dramatic plot and well sustained romantic interest, things many Western pictures lack. The brunette Lina Basquette, former Ziegfeld Follies beauty, helps the love interest most effectively.

The Serial and interesting Short Talkies round out an excellent week end bill.

New Theory Of Yawning

A new theory of yawning, tracing this familiar habit of man and of many higher animals far back in evolution to a time when the highest animals were fish and breathed water instead of air, has been proposed by Dr. Albert Peiper of the University of Berlin, Germany. Most psychologists explain yawning, Dr. Peiper recalls, as an unconscious effort of the body to stretch muscles in the chest and throat which begin to be cramped and stiffened by fatigue, much as people who must sit still for several hours feel better if they stand up occasionally and stretch the muscles of their arms and legs.

That yawning usually is caused by fatigue Dr. Peiper does not deny, but he believes the mechanism to be different. In the ages when man's ancestors still were fish there developed, he believes, a set of automatic nervous reactions which caused the fish to gape their mouths wide open whenever the body needed more oxygen, so that a larger quantity of fresh water would pass in through the mouth and out through the gills. Ages later the habit of breathing air was developed and with it the brain centre which now controls ordinary breathing and automatically keeps that exercise going at faster or slower rates depending upon the body's need of oxygen. Meanwhile the older and more primitive nerve centre which opened the mouths of the ancient fish when they needed oxygen has persisted, the theory is, in all animal brains, although subordinated to the more recent and competent brain centre for ordinary breathing. It may happen, however, that fatigue or something else slightly paralyzes this ordinary breathing centre, Dr. Peiper's theory is, may take over the job of its

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. WILLIAM H. COMPTON

The death of Mrs. William H. Compton of Belle River on October 14th, 1932, just after her entering the Prince Edward Island Hospital for treatment, came as a shock to her family, relatives and many friends to whom she was so long and favorably known. The late Mrs. Compton (nee Christina Campbell) was a daughter of the late Donald Campbell and Mrs. Campbell of Heatherdale, P. E. I., and had attained the age of 63 years.

For a number of years the deceased was in poor health, but by patient energy she invariably attended to the manifold duties of her home. After a number of years spent on their farm at Brooklyn, Lot 61, and later at Greek River in the same avocation, Mr. Compton owing to his wife's ill health removed with his family to Belle River where it was hoped changed conditions would prove beneficial. But it would seem that an all wise Providence had ordered otherwise. The disease became complicated with the result as already stated. The deceased was a woman of high moral qualities and strong spiritual life. In her early years she became a member of the Valleyfield Presbyterian Church and later she identified herself with the Peter's Road Church of the Murray Harbor North Presbyterian congregation. Her many friends and relatives will miss her much, but in the home circle her loss will be more keenly felt, as the bereaved husband and family come to realize the great void in the home. It is no doubt a source of joy to them in their loneliness and sorrow to know that their loved one is freed from pain and suffering, and that a happy re-union in the Heavenly Home where she awaits them all is possible.

Besides the bereaved husband, the following are the family: Ellen, a step-daughter in Boston, Mass.; Daniel A., also in Boston; Emaline (Mrs. Benjamin Millar), Murray Harbor North, and Milton at home.

The following brothers and one sister survive: Swynn and Alexander, California; Murdock, a missionary in South Africa; John Archibald, Heatherdale; Margaret, (Mrs. Josiah L. Jenkins), Greek River.

The funeral services were held at the residence of her brother, Mr. John A. Campbell, Heatherdale, on Sunday, Oct. 16th, and was conducted by Rev. Allister Murray of Caledonia. Interment was made in the cemetery at Valleyfield where the services were concluded by Rev. Mr. Sinclair of Valleyfield.

To the bereaved husband and family the deep sympathy of the community is extended.

MR. EUSTACE H. HAVILAND

In the death yesterday morning of Mr. Eustace Heath Haviland, Charlottetown loses one of her oldest and most highly esteemed citizens.

Born in the year 1849, son of Honourable T. Heath Haviland, prominently associated with the public affairs of this Province, occupying the office of Mayor of the City of Charlottetown and Lieutenant Governor of this Province for many years.

Mr. Haviland was a lawyer by profession, and although not active in Court circles, he manifested sound judgment in the discharge of the duties entrusted to him, thereby winning the confidence of all those with whom he came in contact.

Although of a retiring disposition, Mr. Haviland had a great many younger and abler brother, producing wide yawns precisely like the rapping mouth of a suffocated fish.

Gets Mansion Through Joke

Herbert Wightman, a jobbing builder of Wilford, England, owns a peer's house he does not want just because he entered into a joke. Wightman bought for $25 the mansion called St. Heliers, at Nottingham, once the home of the late Lord Trent. He said that he went to the sale to buy some land, and his bidding for the mansion was a joke with a friend. "When the bidding rose from $18 to $21, my friend said, 'Go on, Herbert, bid $25.' I did so," said Wightman. "and another hammer came down, and that's how I bought St. Heliers." The house which cost $30,000, stands in spacious grounds, with tennis courts and a garden, and is in good repair, but there is a ground rent of $30 which must be paid whether St. Heliers is occupied or not.

Cherrapunji, in Assam, had more than 300 inches of rainfall between June and September.

Pa Curries The Car

Mr. Pettigrew laid down his paper and looked contemplatively at Mrs. Pettigrew.

"Do you remember," he said to her, "when I used to call for you, how the wheels of the buggy above and how the harness was all shined up and the brass shined? Looked pretty nice, didn't it?"

Mrs. Pettigrew smiled and tied another knot in her tating.

"Well," she said, "it looked right nice to me. But then, so did Ed. Perkins' buggy and Joe—"

Mr. Pettigrew broke in a little hastily.

"Yes, yes, I know, and that's just it. We boys had something to do then. We knew horses and we liked to take care of them. What I was getting at was, I said to Willy a little while ago, 'Son, why not get out and give the car a good polishing?' and the way he took at you'd a thought I'd asked him to tear down Mt. Washington."

Mrs. Pettigrew defended her son.

"Perhaps he was going somewhere and didn't want to soil his hands," Mr. Pettigrew snorted.

"Soil his hands, huh. When I was his age I had three horses to care for, and that meant a buggy, a democrat wagon, a carryall and a coupe to keep washed and greased and swept out, and harnesses for all of them oiled, and the nickel and brass polished, and the stable kept neat, and robes and blankets free from dust."

"I had to get up at six o'clock every morning, summer and winter. I had to water those horses, clean out the stalls, shake out the bedding that was worth drying out, carry them and give them their hay and oats, and twice a week a bran mash. Did I soil my hands? You just bet I soiled my hands, and it was specially bad in the spring when the horses was shedding. Then the hair flew all over you and by the time you got three horses curried and brushed down, you had a good old fashioned horse smell that no amount of scrubbin' with yellow soap would take away, and that didn't go very well, especially when we got to that stern period of life where we used to meet a certain party with braids tied with a blue or red ribbon, at the corner of Main and Washington Streets and walk to school with her."

Mr. Pettigrew grew contemplative again, and Mrs. Pettigrew ceased her tating and regarded him.

"Peter," she laughed, "you used to smell just like a livery stable."

Mr. Pettigrew sighed.

"Well I wasn't so keen for it then, but I'd give a good deal right now for a whiff of that good old horse smell. Boys today are 'traid to get a little dust or a grease smudge on their hands. They may know about automobiles, but ain't one of 'em knows the difference between a farthingale and a martingale. They'd think a martingale was a bird or a new model eight."

"He hoisted himself to his feet."

"Well, I suppose if th' car's going to get cleaned at all I've got to go out and curry it myself."

Moose, Deer and Bear Plentiful

(Special to the Guardian)
MONCTON, N. B., Oct. 26—Reports continue to come in from guides of hunters securing their legal quota of moose and deer in Nova Scotia. Jack Sharkey, heavy-weight boxing champion returned to Boston with two fine specimens of Nova Scotia deer which "took the count" in Nova Scotia.

Some local hunters around Yarmouth, Phil Potter, Henry Babine, Lawrence Armstrong and Fred Armstrong succeeded in shooting two large moose and in addition, a black bear. Moose, deer and bear are plentiful in the province.

Early one morning recently a resident of Halifax spied a deer on one of the city streets. Around Truro, Don Langley got two deer while constable Bentley of the R. C. M. P. turned hunter of big game instead of those who fall foul of the law and "got his moose." One of the deer brought down by Don Langley was one of the finest specimens seen in the district for some time weighing 300 pounds.

New Brunswick also reports moose, deer and bear falling to hunters' rifles. Wild fowl shooting in all three Maritime provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island is well to the fore, with sportsmen acquiring full bags. The season for ruffed grouse in Nova Scotia other than Cape Breton Island opened October 16th and closes November 15th. On Cape Breton Island the season opens November 1st and closes the same date, November 15.

Sit-In-Chairs

EXETER, N. H., Oct. 27.—The new type of class room at Phillips Exeter Academy, one of the country's most famous preparatory schools for boys, looks more like the directors' room of a big business corporation.

The students, averaging about a dozen to each class room, sit in big, comfortable chairs around a table. The instructor sits nearby at a small desk—on a level with the students, not on the traditional elevated platform.

Dr. Lewis Perry, principal of Exeter, decided upon the new teaching plan as the best method of utilizing the substantial gift which Edward S. Harkness made the Academy two years ago.

By increasing the teaching staff without increasing the size of the student body, the class divisions have been made so small that teacher and students engage in a study conference, or discussion, rather than stiff, formal lectures and recitations. The plan also permits the grouping of students according to their abilities.

One of the advantages of the new study plan is the ease and propriety with which illustrative material can be introduced into recitations.

The Exeter plan will be fully effective within three years, when a total of 25 new teachers will have been added.
