"Couldn't father come up now?" suggested Bradford by way of answer. Thus recalled to the magnitude of the family event Mrs. Bradford hobbled over to the speaking tube which had been fixed in the wall near the door. "Hullo!" she repeated several times before anyone answered. "That you, Rhoda? Come up, both father and you—something's happened."

When she turned to her son again her face was flushed and triumphant. "There never was a cleverer invention for a body's comfort than that speaking tube! The steps it saves! Why here they come!"

The door was quickly opened and Isaac Bradford himself appeared, his apron about his middle, and consternation on his handsome face. He was a man with a spare habit of body, but his face had more austerity than its fine lines at first suggested. That he was emotionally surprised was indicated by the abruptness of his voice. "Jim lad!" was all he was able to say, and his wide strong mouth trembled.

Jim tried to rise, but was prevented, and his father, bending low, left a kiss on his forehead. Rhoda followed suit, her face, like her father's flushed with excitement. A sober, capable person with a rather quick temper and a high hand, she had few of the softer qualities men seek in women. She was unaware of her limitations, and constituted herself the critic, censor, and judge of the family.

"We looked to see you further on the way to health, didn't we, mother? Not crutches for life, I hope?" she said, rushing in where angles feared to tread.

"No, no—I'll soon be through with them!" Jim answered testily. "I don't want any fuss; the sooner I get back where I want to be the better."

The father's face hardened at that. He did not lack patriotism, but he had only two sons, and one slept by the singing willows on the banks of the Marnie.

"Well, time enough to discuss that later. Mean-while, the great thing is that you are here. Why did you steal this march on us? I was preparing to come and meet you, and only waiting for the wire."

"It was not necessary. I know how busy you always are, father, and everybody is kind to the poor beggar on crutches."

"Is there to be no tea for the lad, mother?" said Isaac Bradford then.

"I forget his inside in the sheer joy of looking at his outside," said Mrs. Bradford, with a joyous cackle. "Of course, there'll be tea, and plenty of it. Run to the kitchen and see to the kettle, Rhoda. What a mercy we thought to boil that nice knuckle of ham yesterday, and I made an apple paste to-day, and Susan Lloyd's cheese came from Wensley on Tuesday—so there we are!"

About half an hour later they sat down to a glorious meal, the high tea known and loved in every Yorkshire home. In spite of the rationing, the table seemed to groan as plentifully as of yore.

Jim Bradford in the trenches, in the queer billets he had sampled on the French and Flanders fronts, had often had ecstatic visions of sitting down to such a meal. And so, it had lost its charm! The homely room, the familiar faces faded, and he saw in their stead the long refectory table at Stanton Place, spread with a fair white cloth, the drooping fronds of fern and flowers, the gleam of silver, the shaded lights, the soft-footed servants anticipating every want.

Above all and beyond all was the lure of sweet faces and enchanting figures robed in the garb of mercy.

Quick Pile Relief

No Salves or Cutting

Pile sufferers can only get quick, safe and lasting relief by removing the cause—bad blood circulation in the lower bowel. Cutting and salves can't do this—an internal remedy must be used. HEM-ROID, the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonard, succeeds, because it removes this blood congestion and strengthens the affected parts.

HEM-ROID tablets as sold by druggists everywhere, have such a wonderful record for quick and lasting relief that Hughes Drug Co., Ltd., always sell them with guarantee of money-back if they do not end all Pile suffering.

CHAPTER IV

To please his mother, Jim Bradford took breakfast in bed next morning waiting on him with transparent delight.

"Now, I'll bring the papers to you son, and you'll lie there and read them till I come back from market."

"Not if I know it, mother; but why market is it Saturday?"

"There, there, he doesn't even know the days of the week! But I suppose most days are alike, poor boy," she said with a glance at the crutches, the sight of which never failed to give her a turn. The Bradfords had always been big and strong folk, able for the day's
