Tomorrow is Forever by Gwen Bristow

Then came the four years he had just lived through. The physical wrecks brought to him had been dreadful enough, but they were not the worst. Some of these he could heal and some he could not.

Arthur had been brought to him when he had begun to feel himself giving in to a brutal cynicism. When he examined Arthur, he suddenly felt that here was a man who could prove that ultimate test, not of a human body to recover, but of human courage to overcome disaster.

Arthur had been brought to him when he had begun to feel himself giving in to a brutal cynicism. When he examined Arthur, he suddenly felt that here was a man who could prove that ultimate test, not of a human body to recover, but of human courage to overcome disaster.

Arthur said angrily. "Why don't you do it now?" "You are a man, Kilt, but at all times, you must live. You must do what you must do to live. You must do what you must do to live."

Though he did not realize it then, Arthur remembered later that his own resistance was gradually being worn away by the power of Jacoby's determination.
