Mr. Duvar Gains Five Pounds and Feels Better Than for Years Since Taking Dreo, the Famous Herbal System Builder

Mr. I. H. Duvar, a well known farmer of Cornwall, is another Prince Edward Island man who has given Dreo a fair trial and found in it remarkable health-building properties.

"I feel like a new man since I began taking Dreo. For a long while I had been troubled with stomach disorders, indigestion and constipation. Everything I ate would cause gas and severe pains and at times I would get very dizzy as a result. Constipation was mine."

Another great trouble of mine was that reliable people speak so highly of Dreo is conclusive evidence of its merit. Dreo is scientifically prepared as a general health and system builder. The juices of herbs, roots, bark and leaves from which it is compounded, give it tonic and corrective properties that benefit all the organs of digestion.

Dreo is being specially introduced in Charlottetown by E. A. Foster. It is also sold in Summerside by Gallant Drug Co. Limited, in Montague by H. J. Mabon, in Souris by Souris Drug Co., and by a good druggist everywhere.

A NEW LIFE

Chapter 38

Next day, being Monday, Mrs. Talbot began her housecleaning. Saturday night late she thought of it, Sunday she determined on it.

"You may know a lot of things I don't," she remarked at the breakfast table. "But at least I know how to keep a clean house."

"The place is clean," Jane objected. "You're too fussy, mother."

Mother answered nothing. She waited patiently, one might say rigidly, for the family to get out of the way.

Luther left at 8.30 to get to his office at 9—that seemed frightfully late to the woman who was used to farm work being underway by 6 or earlier.

Jane had her first lecture at 10.30, and sat in the living room studying for an hour before she left. Amy arose at 10, and after her bath appeared in her blue silk robe for breakfast.

"Don't bother about me, mother," she said sweetly. "I always get my own breakfast when I wake up. Jane does her share of the work and goes out and I finish up."

Mrs. Talbot did not bother. She was in the living room by this time, and while Amy sat in the dining room, eating an egg and drinking her coffee while she read Luther's castaside paper, she began cleaning. She moved all the furniture out of her room, except the pieces too heavy for her, and she began with a bucket of hot water and a brush and soap.

In many ways it was much easier than similar work at home, because there was unlimited hot water by turning a faucet. And the rooms were small.

Amy protested that the rooms had been done the week before. "A woman comes every Friday and cleans," she said.

"Once a week?" Mrs. Talbot snorted. "Might as well not come at all."

"I have a singing lesson this afternoon, and I have to practise," the girl looked ruefully at the disordered room. "I'll go to Claire's and use her piano."

Mrs. Talbot had the flat, and the day, to herself. She had never worked so hard or so fast. She stopped only to heat up the left-over breakfast coffee when in the early afternoon she began to feel faint. By 6, when the three children came straggling, the apartment fairly shook.

But Jane met her mother to bed and gave her hot soup and toast and a lecture.

"After all, it's a good thing you came here to live, where we can look after you," she said.

"It's a good thing I came here to look after you," the mother answered.

Jane, going into the dining room to join her brother and sister, shrugged her shoulders a little and reported:

"The perfectly hopeless. She thinks we're careless, disorderly, lazy, and neglected as well. She's going to spend this whole winter running us according to her old standards in the country."

"She thinks I'm a lost soul," Amy said, half laughing, half angry. "She saw me smoking, she thinks that's an unforgivable sin."

"Donald is afraid to come around while she's here," Jane went on.

"Jane laughed suddenly. "I'm sick in my head. He's coming around tonight again. I must do something to stop that. He'll be here all the time. It's too ridiculous."

The yate in silence, each one considering the problem as it affected each one separately. Amy was entranced with the pleasures the city offered. She was pretty and she knew it. Claire had generously given her a lot of clothes that emphasized her good looks, and had taken the girl along with her into her own circle of friends.

Claire was generous enough not to mind having other young and pretty women about her. In the case of Amy, the young girl's open admiration flattered her. She too was caught by the curious fascination of this suburban girl with the wide set innocent brown eyes and the curious surface sophistication that seemed to have suddenly become implanted in her.

Jane thought of Donald—and his impatience with her mother's ideas. Luther wondered whether he could not smooth things out.

After dinner had been cleared away, Amy took Dick off "to show him Broadway at night." Jane and Donald went away to visit one of his charity patients. Luther thought regretfully that he might have had one been around—had purchased a gallery ticket and watched Claire playing. He did that every night he was left alone.

Instead of going to his mother's room and tried to argue her into a more tolerant attitude.

"Our ways are new ways," he said once. "Because they are new you must not condemn them. How do you know that after all, they aren't as good or better, than the ways you've been brought up in?"

"I think the trouble is that you've been so overlooked and worried all your life, so concerned with petty problems, that you can't see the big things. You know the forest for the trees! That's your case, mother."

"Maybe," the mother said, setting her lips. "But I see a lot of things that have got to be changed."

So with general distrust, the winter together started.

Published by arrangement with Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Watch for the screen version produced by Frank Lloyd with Corinne Griffith as Countess Zattiany.

At a first night performance in New York a beautiful young woman attracts attention by rising and leisurely surveying the audience through her glasses. Clavering, a newspaper columnist, and his cousin, Dinwiddie, are particularly interested. Dinwiddie declaring she is the image of Mary Ogden, a belle of thirty years ago, who had married a Count Zattiany.

Clavering finally manages to meet her, and she tells him she is the Countess Josef Zattiany, a cousin of Mary Ogden's and had married a relative of Mary's husband. Clavering does not believe her story and tells her so.

As time goes on Clavering realizes that he is in love with the mysterious Madame Zattiany, whose first name, he learns, is Mary. He declares his passion and draws from her the admission of a reciprocal warmth of feeling.

Mrs. Oglethorpe, having offered her to attend the opera with him one evening. Her appearance there in the Oglethorpe box, regally gowned and the syncope of all eyes, is somewhat in the nature of a challenge to that forbidding Society which had realized the time had come to question her credentials, and clear up the mystery. She promises Clavering she will reveal her secret to him the following Saturday night.

"Damn nonsense! No, I didn't know it. I supposed she was properly chaperoned as girls of her class always have been. You know how much I care for Society, and I haven't got to the chicken stage either. Took it for granted that certain cast-iron conventions were still observed, in our set at least. Of course, I've seen her drink cocktails at home and thought it rather tame, and I've rubbed the point of her cheeks and lips once or twice. Girls are making up nowadays as if they were strumpets, but some little fool started it, and you know the old saying: 'What one monkey does the other monkey must do.' It never worried me. Of course I've heard more or less about these young ladies, they're always being discussed and written up; but somehow you never think those things can happen in your own family. . . . I went straight home and blew up Molly. . . . I hadn't a sight of Janet yet—and of course she bawled. Always does. When I told her that Janet had been at the party she protested that Janet had told her she was going to bed early that night. Even last night, when she had a theatre party, she understood that some young married woman was along. But Molly's a fool. . . . What on earth am I to do with the story of the man who couldn't see the forest for the trees! That's your case, mother."

"Maybe," the mother said, setting her lips. "But I see a lot of things that have got to be changed."

RED ROSE TEA "is good tea" and particularly good in the ORANGE PEKOE QUALITY, fine to the taste and economical in the pot.

Without their allowances they'd soon be helpless. It would be a battle royal and might make history. Might also get hold of the fathers of these young chaps. Few have independent incomes. Oglethorpe laughed for the first time. "Not a bad idea for a bachelor, Lee. Maybe I'll try it. Let's get out of this. How about the Follies?" (To be Continued)

MRS. ANDERSON TELLS WOMEN

How Backache and Periodic Pains Yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Leslie, Sask.—"For about a year I was troubled with a distressing down bearing pain before and during the periods, and with terrible headaches and backache. I hated to go to a doctor, and as I knew several women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results, I finally bought some and took four bottles of it. I certainly do recommend it to every woman with troubles like mine. I feel fine now and hope to be able to keep your medicine on hand at all times, as no woman ought to be without it in the house."

Mrs. OGDEN A. ANDERSON, Box 15, Leslie, Sask.

Mrs. Kelsey Adds Her Testimony

Copenhagen, N. Y.—"I read your advertisement in the papers and my husband induced me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to get relief from my pains and weakness. I was so weak that I could not walk at times. Now I can do my housework and help my husband out doors, too. I am willing for you to publish this letter if you think it will help others."

Mrs. HERBERT KELSEY, R.F.D., Copenhagen, N. Y.

Sick and ailing women everywhere in the Dominion should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before they give up hope of recovery.
