The Premier As A Schoolboy Sees Him

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, July 19.—Some amusing impressions of the Prime Minister were given by students in answer to examination questions set in connection with free scholarship offered by the directors of the De Bear schools.

Twelve hundred aspirants sat at various provincial centres. There were some of the results of asking for impressions of the Premier:

"Mr. Baldwin looks like a man who will keep the Universe in order."

"Mr. Baldwin is always photographed with a pipe in his mouth, which never seems to leave his hand."

"I think Mr. Baldwin will not be as bossy as Lloyd George." A dead heat.

Another question which inspired the unexpected was: "Write sentences to illustrate the meaning of the following words and terms: 'incumbent,' 'jostle,' 'baker's dozen,' 'dead heat,' 'curtain lecture.'"

The following gems were submitted: "He is a funny jostle."

"A certain lecture is a lecture in front of a curtain."

"When he brought that sitting of eggs he obtained a Baker's dozen; twelve guaranteed to be hens and the remaining one a cockerel."

"The man, being very incumbent could hardly pass through the doorway."

"The boy won the race, but arrived at the post in a dead heat."

"Dragons are supposed to have devoured maidens like anisod balls," said one competitor in answer to the question as to what was understood by the word 'dragon' while a shocking state of overcrowding was indicated by a youth who placed the population of Brantford at two millions, and that of Hull at three hundred millions.

MR. IVAN HUGHES
Citizens were shocked yesterday forenoon to learn of the death of Mr. Ivan Hughes, which occurred at the Charlottetown Hospital about 10.30.

The deceased was stricken with an attack of acute indigestion on Tuesday night, Wednesday morning he was removed to the hospital where despite the best medical attention and nursing he passed away.

The late Mr. Hughes, who was in his 30th year was a young man of promise. Everyone who knew him or had business relations with him was his friend.

He entered the employ of A. B. & Co. as a boy, by his strict attention to duty he was given a clerkship in which capacity he won many new friends. A few years ago he was admitted as a partner and was looked upon as one of the solid young business men of the city.

The deceased was a prominent member of St. Dunstan's Cathedral, and was at all times ever ready and willing to lend his aid in entertainments for any worthy cause. He was also an usher in the Cathedral and a prominent member of the Knights of Columbus.

The late Mr. Hughes, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hughes leaves besides his six surviving children three brothers and five sisters to mourn the loss of a loving and kind son and brother.

The Guardian joins in sincere sympathy to the bereaved.

Longer Skirts For Longchamp

PARIS, July 19.—The Grand Prix has been run and the horses performed about as usual. What is about equally important is that the ladies also performed as usual and it was noticeable that their dresses showed considerable change from last year.

Clothes came down to the ankle, and for the first time since the Armistice the smart Frenchwoman was liable to catch her heel in her own. Some heel, too; called Louis XV. by disconcerting, because the staidly stupid son of the Grand Monarch never saw such multi-colored and gem-studded things in his court as those on which the Grand Prixites tipped this year.

Blue, crimson, scarlet, that warm shade of builder's putty which is quite unreasonably called mauve in English, in spite of its sounding so much more like toothpaste; purple, and a dozen other shades and half shades which suit the world and half-world in which they move—all these heels were visible at Longchamp.

Sandshoes, however, were equally worthy of notice. They were at least equally long in the stem and small at the end, equally unlike in colour, equally ridiculous, but set as be thankful, they must have been worn by a goodly number of Parisiennes.

Expensive jewelry, hats were large becoming and impracticable. And to go into the domain of politics for a moment, I repeat to my that it was with a kind of jealousy that Paris learned that the son that she had so long sailed upon for Grand Prix had been so internationally important as to make a Sunday a success at the Champ.

The Frenchwoman, with all her life, is an enigma of the English complexion that she suffers the same pain from time to time led on a spurt of national indignity and Englishwoman should have to be a year or her a child.

That Miss Apple Blossom at Longchamp, who would as soon as she could be buried as she would allow her manicured fingers to close around anything so crude as a panty.

The thing is easy. If you wish to be well dressed, the thing is perfectly easy, if you have small hips and shoulders, are shortish, have cheeky small features, and unlimited credit at your dress-makers, plaster yourself with embroidery in horizontal
