ELOQUENT LECTURE

the histories for German schools and colleges, the literature upon which the people of the country were intellectually sustained, were sowing the seed the harvest of which we have gathered with blood and with tears today and were preparing the people for the great day in which Britain's power would be challenged and Britain's supremacy become a record of the past. When every plan was perfected and every arrangement made she delivered her challenge, and in your day of activity, and response and mine that challenge has been uttered. The rising up of the Motherland, and the response of the overseas Dominions, you may take as the Empire's attitude and the Empire's response to the German challenge.

Defeat, the speaker went on to say, would mean the passing of the Empire; but that would not be all. A victorious Germany would mean not only the passing of our nation but the world's dominant race. The passing of the Anglo-Saxon race would mean the extinguishing of the laws of civilization, kindled for the benefit of all peoples by this great race. The shrine would be broken, the white ash of despair would be found upon the altar.

But Germany must not win, and Germany shall not win if Britons to themselves are true. I don't say that if we win no other test shall come to us, that in the future our rights shall be unchallenged; but I do say that a long lease of power will be given in which to consolidate the Empire, to strengthen it in righteousness, and to qualify the people for their exalted services. Therefore, the message and the lesson of the two mottoes so familiar to my hearers must be fully applied: "Britons, guard your own;" and "What we have we will hold." If Britons follow the instruction of these mottoes, intelligently apprehend the responsibilities and opportunities, there can be no question about the ultimate issue. There comes to my thought, as I think of the challenge to the men of today, that martial song of Scotland:

"I hear the pibroch sounding, sounding, o'er the mountain and glen, and light springing footsteps are trampling the heath; 'Tis the march, 'tis the march of the Cameron men."

We have no pibroch in Canada, only as we have borrowed it from the land of our fathers. But if our ears were attuned and we were sensitive to the situation in which we now are, we would discover that from where the rude Atlantic tosses his cresty billows against the rugged shores of Great Britain to where the Pacific receives into its embrace the setting sun, and from the boundary between us and the nation to the south of us on to the lands of the frozen North—there comes the sound that arrests the attention of the nations: "Tis the march. 'Tis the march of Canadian men." true to the traditions of the past, obedient to the call of the blood, and devoted to the great welfare of the Empire. For in the Canadian character there stand out three dominant, conspicuous elements: his veneration for the land of his fathers; his love for the land of his birth; and his ardent devotion to the great Empire to which he belongs.

Dr. Campbell then made an eloquent appeal to the youth of the country to heed the call of the Empire. "Forward," he said, under the Old Flag of the great Empire; but as you go forth to the battle nail your flag just below the Cross of Jesus Christ. That place is high enough for it, and neither Austrian nor Prussian, nor German nor Turk nor Hun shall make you haul it down. The nation calls: home and virtue call; and God is sounding a trumpet that has never answered him; he jubilate my feet, for God is marching on."

The lecturer said that personally he was not prepared to pray for immediate peace. He thought peace would be unwise until justice had been meted out to the unholy and blood-thirsty enemy of the day. "Until Belgium has been recompensed for the devastations of her land, until the people who are guilty of sinking great steamers and sending innocent women and children to a watery grave shall have had meted out to them the punishment which is their due, I say not only let this war go on but throw away your calendars and get down to this mighty work."

Dr. Campbell closed with a reference to the unification of the great Empire, its consolidation, and its preparation for more efficient service in the uplifting of man, reminding his audience of what a united Empire would mean, and how it would be regarded by the nations of the world. In the stately sentences of the Canadian poet, Theodore Roberts:

Ye who would reckon with Britain; ye who would sweep the seas,
And the flag that Rodney nailed aloft and Nelson sung to the breeze;
Count well your ships and your men;
Count well your horse and your gun.
For they who would reckon with Britain must reckon with Britain's sons.

Ye who would roll to warfare your hordes of peasants and slaves,
To crush the pride of the Empire and sink her fame in the waves;
Test well your blood and your mettle
Count well your troops and your guns;
For they who battle with Britain, must war with Britain's sons.

horses present, half the entries not coming out, thinking the storm of the night before would spoil the course, but the speed committee had put it in excellent shape.

The 2.50 class was called first, six answering the bell and they got away on the third score, Merry Widow soon assuming the lead which she held to the end, Darkwood Daisy second, Yankee Boy 3rd, Harry P. 4th.

The second heat returned the same winner, but the fight for place and show was a corker, Yankee Boy getting 2nd, Darkwood Daisy 3rd, Harry P. 4th, but as the latter was not working well he was drawn at the end of this heat.

The final went to the divorced lady and so impressive was her race that many are wondering whether the Club is not going to turn out another Queen Catherine. Darkwood Daisy won 2nd, and will improve with work. Both she and Merry Widow are by Darkwood owned by John McPhee, Free-town, Khaki Girl was rank and steady but showed lights of speed. Yellow Bird was short some rigging and was shy of the crowd.

Just here let it be understood that this is a sporting Club and that Match Races are frowned on, but if the gentleman who was flashing his money for action he can be accommodated, when the next 2.40 class is called.

There were seven entries in the 3-minute class, but only three elected to try and Happy Boy proved best as Medium Happy was far from himself and the race was won in straight heats and devoid of interest.

The 2.40 simmered down to two, only Harry Mac being willing to try conclusions with Owna, and the latter won in straight heats "Mac" putting up a scrap in one heat only.

The next race will be held Tuesday, February 8th, and will be called at 1.30 P. M. There will be two classes the 3 year old and a 2.40 the latter open to Summerside, and only non-record horses will be allowed to start. If the day is fine the course will be ready as the committee have arranged to have it cleared.

Do not forget the big Free-For-All trot and free-for-all pace which will take place about the middle of February.

W. S. Found, Saturday, Feb. 12th.

HORSE NOTES.

A compliment rarely uttered by the possessor of a rival colt was passed to Mr. Mike McKenna, Vernon, by Aloysius Sullivan upon the workout of a Zealot (2.29) 2½ year old owned by Frank Rooney, Orwell Cove. "I have a filly from Captain Aubrey" that cost me a service fee of $25.00 and am justly proud of her; but if she comes down the stretch in such a grand style when three years old, it will exceed my expectations Zealot brings home the bacon—Should the ice clear a dozen or so of fast ones that can show a 2.20 clip will face the starter on Vernon River ice.
