Atlantic Storm Endangers Shipping

Many lives are in peril and much property is damaged as a storm, accompanied by exceptionally high tides, lashed the Atlantic seaboard, concentrating much of its fury upon unprotected points at Devil's Island, Duncan's Cove, Herring Cove and Chebucto Head. At the first-named place, the wife of the lighthouse keeper battled the storm after their house had collapsed, and carried her three children to the safety of an old Marcella tower. The drawing shows the ship Rosalind being tossed by the storm-torn Atlantic, her propeller broken. A relief ship is speeding to her aid. Much shipping has been damaged, including many boats of the fishing fleet.
