Pomeroy's Death Recalls Crime Of Fifty Years Ago

BRIDGEWATER, Mass., Oct. 5.—Jesse Pomeroy, America's oldest lifer in point of service, died suddenly Friday at the Bridgewater state farm.

In 1873, Jesse Pomeroy, a boy of 15, murdered his chum in circumstances of abominable cruelty. Medical experts, called in the case, reported the child was so morally warped that he should be kept in solitary confinement, and he was committed to prison for life under those circumstances.

His solitary plight, however, moved the Massachusetts prison warden to pity, and he gave the lad a cat as a companion in his cell. A few days later, however, the boy's mania overcame him, and he killed his pet with refinements of torture. After that he lived alone.

Almost half a century passed and the old lifer at last saw a chance to escape. He got out of his cell, crept down the corridor and passed the turnkey's room. Freedom was all but in sight. Suddenly the turnkeys heard a fearful clamor, they rushed out, to find Pomeroy struggling with a cat which had mysteriously appeared from nowhere and launched himself upon the convict's head. The guards seized Pomeroy and he was led back to his cell. When the excitement subsided the incident of the cat's death 50 years before was recalled by more than one curious mind.

MRS. JOHN CAMERON

Mrs. John Cameron, whose death has already been noted, was the daughter of Edward Ellis and Annie Rogers, his wife, and was born at East Bideford, March 5, 1879. She had for about four years, been in failing health. The very best medical skill was unavailing to stay the uncertain hand of death, and she succumbed very suddenly from heart failure.

Her adopted home was in Cambridge, Mass., and at the time of death, was visiting her relatives, and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. H. F. Phillips, Tyne Valley.

Of an original family of twelve, only one had died, previous to the death of the deceased.

To mourn, she leaves her husband, John Cameron and sons, Ellis and James, and daughters, Buehlah and Dorothy, and two stepchildren, Edwin and Janette.

A short service was held at the home of her sister, Mrs. Phillips, Tyne Valley, thence the remains were taken to the Undertaking Parlors of her nephew, Mr. G. Roy Phillips, Kensington. They were, from here, conveyed to Cambridge, Mass., accompanied by her two children, where interment took place.

Mrs. Cameron was a lady of intellectual character, and was the admired of every social circle in which she moved. Her first duty was to God, then to her family. The home circle was her kingdom, and here, with her beloved husband, she reigned supreme. Thoughtful and charitable, she was, and the home circle and the social sphere were the superior because of her presence. She decreed the happiness of others before her own, and her absence will leave a void that time cannot fill. Her family and her friends will ever hold her memory most dear, and the wise counsel and the emphatic example that she has chosen, will long, long, endure.

Mystic Rites To Bring Rain Resorted To

WINNIPEG, Oct. 5.—Strange mystic rites, revived last July by farmers of the little Ukrainian settlement of Senkiw, Man., in an effort to save their drought stricken crops from destruction, may, in the opinion of those participating in the ancient and unlawful ceremony, have succeeded in bringing about a downpour, but they also got at least three members of the community into serious trouble.

Resulting from the peculiar performance, a trio of farmers, John Salamdyk, Mike Maurschuk and Sidar Smuk, were arraigned before Magistrate Andrews at Emerson last Monday afternoon. Upon their conviction under 237 (B) of the criminal code, which deals with interfering with or the offering of any indignity to human remains, they were allowed their freedom on five years suspended sentence.

The trouble arose, so far as police can learn, last July, when, despite sufficient rainfall in other sections of the district, crops in the immediate vicinity of Senkiw, situated just north of Emerson, suffered severely from drought.

Being somewhat of a superstitious nature, old time residents sought advice from the "wise" woman of the community, who, calling upon her supposed clairvoyant talents, suggested a mystic ritual, which, she claimed, would relieve the suffering.

Two years previous, in 1930, the "wise" woman declared, a young girl had been drowned in Mosquito Creek, a small stream running through the district. This, she said had angered the gods, who would shower no further favors until some sacrifice had been made.

Should the body of the unfortunate drowning victim be disinterred, said the "wise" one, and the coffin drenched with water, the wrath of the gods would be appeased and the rain, once more would pour down upon the thirsting grain.

And so, following out these strange instructions, a little group of worried farmers visited the graveyard by the dead of night, removed the earth from the top of the coffin, showered it with water and after again covering it up, slunk homeward through the darkness to await results.

They had not long to wait, according to several superstitious members of the community, for, on the fourth day, rain fell in torrents over the stricken area. Mosquito Creek was again filled to overflowing and the crops of the Senkiw district were saved.

Everyone seemed happy, and it was not until a few weeks ago that a relative of the drowned girl himself a farmer in the community heard of the strange ceremony performed over her grave. Angered, he promptly notified the authorities, and a few days later the three accused were apprehended.

Still believing that the mystic rites were entirely responsible for the rainfall the more superstitious of the old timers of the district are said to be amazed at the action of the child's relative, whose own crops, they claim, were also saved by the "miracle."
