King's Kindness Marked Crowning of "Peacemaker"

LONDON, April 12.—(CP)—Strange and even cruel happenings associated with past coronations are scattered so frequently in the roll of English history that the coronation of Edward VII in 1902 stands out by reason of a very kindly incident. The aged Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Frederick Temple, father of the present Archbishop of York, knelt to do homage to the Sovereign but was unable to rise again to his feet. Edward thereupon left the Chair for a moment and gently assisted the stricken primate to his feet. "God bless you, Sir, God bless you," murmured the Archbishop. It was on account of Dr. Temple's infirmities that the Archbishop of York, then Dr. MacLagan, crowned Queen Alexandra. Edward and his Queen, Alexandra, were beloved, Edward having achieved a warm place in the affections of England through his diligent services as Prince of Wales during the latter years of the reign of Victoria. It was the especial distinction of Edward to have been a substantial support of the throne before he was called upon to occupy it. He was exemplary in the discharge of his public duties and in his scrupulous detachment from party politics. His coronation was postponed by the long drawn-out war in South Africa. Fixed first for June 26, 1902, another postponement was necessary, the King suffering from perityphlitis, which necessitated an operation. The King's recovery was rapid and the coronation took place Aug. 9. Though shorn of much magnificence which would have been added to it three months before by the presence of foreign royalties, the ceremony was performed in Westminster Abbey amid great rejoicings.

Harvard Gives Club Eight Oared Shell

DARTMOUTH, N.S., April 12.—Presentation of an eight-oared shell to the North Star Aquatic Club of this Halifax Harbor town by Harvard University is being hailed by followers of shell racing as a "sporting gesture unparalleled in Maritime athletic history."

But the city and town aquatic clubs, their regattas suffering from attendances depleted by the depression and the automobile which made week-end out-of-town trips easy, were not immediately able to purchase eight-oared shells and to provide quarters for them. Jubilee Club was the first to buy one. For a year it lay in the shell house, unused in competition because there was no other club with a similar shell. The North Stars decided to buy one and opened negotiations for the purchase of a Harvard boat. But when the Harvard athletic head, William J. "Bill" Bingham, learned of the interest aroused in the younger oarsmen, and of the effort being made to sponsor eight-oared shell racing, he presented the Dartmouth club with its first eight-man boat. And now eight-oared shell racing seems assured for Halifax regattas this summer.

Sudden Death From Heart Attack

ST. STEAGATHE, Que., April 7.—A verdict of death by natural causes was reached tonight by a coroner's jury inquiring into the death of Genevieve Lund, New Brunswick-born nurse at the Laurentian Sanatorium here. Miss Lund was found dead early today in a hallway of the institution. Medical testimony at the inquest was that she had died of a heart attack. Dr. J. M. Roussel, Quebec Province medico-legal expert from Montreal performed the autopsy. Dr. J. R. Blais of St. Jerome, coroner, heard from officials of the institution that Miss Lund's body had been found slumped over a hot radiator, she was believed to have taken ill and collapsed on the way to a washroom. Miss Lund, 28, was a daughter of Rev. John L. Lund, of Pentz, N.S. A graduate of Moncton City Hospital, she had been at the sanatorium here for three years.

Byrd Tells What Individual Can Do To Check War

Can we, as individuals, do anything to avert war? Admiral Richard E. Byrd believes that we can, and in the Rotarian Magazine enumerates several steps that can be taken by all individuals desiring to maintain peaceful relations between nations. "The first step," urges the famous arctic explorer, who on his last trip to the South Pole resolved to devote most of the remainder of his life to efforts for peace, "is to inform ourselves and our children as to what is involved in the choices to be made. Take just one of the questions of peace: disarmament. How much does the man in the street know about it? The point is that disarmament is not as simple as it sounds. We need to inform ourselves about it, as we need to inform ourselves about all the problems of peace. To promote peace, we must know what peace means. "A second step, perhaps, is to study war and violence as institutions, and to reach conclusions about them. Is violence effective? Is war an efficient method of settling disputes? Disregarding ethical considerations, bloodshed, ruined lives, biological consequences, and the like, does war do the immediate job of settling international disputes? "We think in sober moments that we must avoid war at all costs; yet when the hour comes, in our excitement the greater imperative seems to be to save our country against what apparently threatens it. Perhaps we can fortify ourselves against this by calm logic before the war clouds arise. Perhaps we can convince ourselves, and then others, that war does not settle problems and difficulties. "A third step, individuals can take, perhaps," continues Admiral Byrd, "is to inform themselves as to what is really necessary for peace. Can nations live side by side in amity? We know, of course, that they can. The classic instance is Canada and the United States, two countries having the longest common frontier of any nations—without one mile of that frontier fortified—and not in a century and a quarter has there been war, or the serious threat of war. The countries of the Scandinavian peninsula, also, have not known war for more than a century. "The final thing, of course, after having informed ourselves, is to take positive action toward the realization of our beliefs. Of the 'way, I am not so sure—nor am I sure that any one way is the only way... I would not want to close my mind to any proposal honestly and competently made with the purpose of furthering peace. When peace comes, it will no doubt come through the meeting and agreement of many minds which among themselves possess diverse views on most subjects—and even on methods of attaining this objective."
