KING HUMBERT'S FUNERAL.

The body of the Dead Monarch Was Followed Through the Streets of Rome by a Cortege of Imposing Magnificence.

ROME, Aug. 9.—With as much simplicity as the last rites to a Monarch would permit, the body of the late Humbert of Italy was laid to rest in the Pantheon here today. Vast crowds of people uncovered and silent, viewed the cortege along the streets leading to the place of sepulchre.

The casket, borne on a gun carriage, was preceded by the late King's General Aide de Camp, carrying the dead man's sword, followed by Humbert's favorite war horse in black caparison and surrounded by those who had been closest to him in councils of state, Rome was a mass of sombre decoration.

The funeral train, which left Monza yesterday, accompanied by the Duke of Aosta, the Count of Turin, and the Duke of Oporto, arrived here at 6.30 a.m. to-day. Immediately after that hour the funeral procession began to form.

At an early hour this morning ten non-commissioned officers of Cuirassiers carried the casket containing the remains of the late King Humbert from the funeral station, which had been transformed into a chapel, hung with sable draperies with gold ornaments. The Chaplain of Court assisted by a number of priests pronounced the absolution and the cortege started for the Pantheon where rest the remains of King Victor Emanuel II.

The immense space surrounding the railroad station was entirely filled with people, and as the casket was borne into the open air, all uncovered and remained bare headed, while the procession was in view. After the casket had been placed on a gun carriage, King Victor Emanuel III took his place at the head of the Princes and Diplomats who followed the remains.

Preceding the cortege, which was most imposing in its magnificence was a battery of artillery, a band of music, and then a battalion from each division of the Italian army, and marine corps, many army and navy officers, representatives of the scientific and educational institutions, Mayors, Cabinet Ministers, Senators and Deputies. Just ahead of the casket were about a hundred priests and one hundred friars, including the Court Chaplains.

The gun carriage bearing the casket was drawn by six horses, and was surrounded by officers and functionaries of the civil and military houses of the Royal Prince. And of the late king, and was immediately preceded by the late king's first general aide-de-camp on horseback bearing the sword of the late king.

As the body of the dead monarch was borne along towards the Pantheon tears were streaming down the faces of many of the spectators. Behind the casket was the late King's beautiful bay war horse covered with long, black drapery.

Bringing up the rear of the cortege were the flags of the army with on honorary escort, several municipal and provincial deputations and finally a squadron of cavalry.

When the head of the procession reached the Pantheon an enormous crowd occupied every available foot of space. All the adjacent street balconies and terraces in the vicinity were filled with spectators, but not a word interrupted the solemnity of the scene. The multitude remained in respectful silence with uncovered heads.

The streets, through which the procession passed, were draped with black, and along the route were poles covered with cypress branches. Stringings of palms entwined with black bunting stretched across the streets. During the march flowers were thrown from the windows at the passing casket.

King Victor Emanuel, who was on foot, bore himself with dignity, and carried his head high. At some points attempts were made to acclaim the new King, but the exclamations were repressed. The solemn silence more clearly expressed the feeling of grieving people. During the march of the procession several crushes occurred. Among those present in the crowd on the Via de Serpenti, twenty persons received slight wounds, and thirty others were

On the steps of the altars were placed wreaths of bronze and flowers for which a place could not be found on the catafalque. Under the central arch, opposite the main doorway, a large Latin cross was suspended from the arched roof, while black drapings and cypress wreaths surrounded the funeral inscription in the interior of the temple and produced an effect as grand as it was impressive.

The catafalque, seven metres high, was placed on a pedestal one metre high, on this a number of wreaths were deposited. The upper part was covered with lilac velvet trimmed with gold and ornamented with palms. There were placed the wreaths of the Princes and other high personages. Over the catafalque was erected a gorgeous canopy with an iron cupola supported by sixteen artistic, slender columns. In the cupola were one hundred lighted lamps and around the catafalque were forty-eight war tapers suspended by artistic iron chains.

It is almost literally true that Rome did not sleep last night. People from the Provinces poured into the Capital to witness the ceremony, until the sidewalks were crowded so that circulation was practically impossible.

It was a weird sight, for, in addition to the funeral decorations, the electric lights and other illuminating apparatus, covered with black bunting, gave everything a peculiar sombre hue.

At dawn the people began to seek various points of vantage in order to witness the cortege, while an immense crowd gathered in the Plaza before the railway station, where a genuine crush occurred, it being estimated that no fewer than 100,000 persons assembled there.

During the ceremony all business was suspended. The cortege was an imposing sight. It was six kilometres long, as the procession solemnly moved along the avenues that were hung with deepest mourning between the station and the Pantheon, the spectacle was one never to be forgotten.

The "Iron Crown" which was carried behind the casket is the celebrated Iron Crown of Lombardy constructed of iron and gold for the King of the Lombards in 591. This is the crown which Napoleon Bonaparte first joined to that of France at Milan in 1805. It was used at the coronation of Charlemagne.

Our Christian Civilization.

The following is a sample of Christian civilization in the United States. Out of our population of 75,000,000, we have 80,000 clergymen to help civilize us, 99,000 lawyers to help distort justice, 85,000 professional criminals and fully ten times as many non-union criminals, mostly in high society and in Congress, 75,000 paupers and only 6,000 authors and scientists. We have 1,000,000 tramps and 5,400 professors; 157,000 bartenders and 9,700 actors; 5,000,000 common laborers, and 9,300 designers and inventors. It can truthfully be said that we have discovered how to make money, but not to make men.—Pueblo Courier.
