The Wall Flower HAS NEVER FELT THE RHEUMATISM

EXPLANATIONS. Chapter 81

Pan wondered how Gloria could be so round this. For Gloria had built all her mis-erable theory on Santley's absence and on the fact that she hadn't heard from him. Now it appeared that he had gone at once to New York—presumably to her. This was the time for explanations, and Pan did not want to be present.

"It's Frankie's bedtime," protested Gloria, even before the boy could voice his own objection. "Yes, but by the time he has his supper and his bath—"

"It will be 6.30 or less. He doesn't go to bed until seven, and he may stay a little longer today in honor of remembering the acquaintance of his friend."

"I'm going to call you Santley—please can I? I call George and the others by their first names."

"His candid dark eyes beamed upon this new friend. Santley smiled at him—his face was lovable when he relaxed into a smile."

"I am honored to be classed with the others," he answered. The two women caught the slight accent of the last word. Gloria flushed the least bit.

"My son is spoiled, I'm afraid he's too much with grown-ups, and he picks up odd ways. Frankie, you shouldn't say—"

"Please don't degrade me by having him call me Mr. Collins—after I've been elevated by him and placed among the others," Santley protested, the last word still slightly accented. There was the merest tinge of sarcasm. Santley was having revenge for Gloria's greeting."

"Pan began to see how he could be an extremely clever lawyer. She began to watch this conversational sword play with great interest. This sort of thing Gloria was skilled in. She herself could not do it at all she was too simple and direct by nature, she said who was in her mind or kept silent."

"She began to suspect that Gloria had met her match in Santley. For

"I'll call you what you please, it's most charming of you to let him use your first name," she said. "Now, what's this about New York? You know you have a unique position here, you're making a great success, a lawyer's reputation depends as much upon the length of time he's been in one place as on ability. Why pull up stakes?"

"This was almost daring him to say why, Pan thought. But he answered: "One grows seedy staying on in one place too much. Even successful becomes a rut, after a time. I was fascinated by New York—"

"Santley! Anyone as conservative as you—I have heard you rage against high buildings and gaudy lights, and noise and nervousness and hustle—everything that makes our New York the beloved nuisance it is!"

"Probably you have, I may have changed, Gloria—they say we shed our skins completely once every seven years. It's been nearly seven years, hasn't it?"

"Frankie answered calmly following perfectly talk he isn't supposed to understand. "For I'm not seven and I remember you."

"He had another trick, common to serious children and to children with vivid imaginations—he thought he remembered the things and the people he had been told about. Gloria explained this to Santley, who laughed and said, "I accept your amendment, Frankie—but it's five years at least."

"He went on: "I called you—about, Frank. There was no use adding details. I thought I would write you them—but I wanted to see you, five years is a long time. Your own idea of coming here was so vague—I supposed you had dropped it. I took passage on the first boat I could get—that is, as soon as I could finish some pressing business I had. I wasn't even sure then I could make the boat, thought I might have to wait over, but managed it at the last moment and had a cable sent you by my office. You missed—and you called me, I should have received it."

"Reproach was in his voice, but Gloria ignored it. "I landed, phoned your office and had no reply. I didn't believe that, so went there, and the janitor said you had gone for the Summer, he thought to Europe. I went to your apartment, which was closed. I hunted up some friends, who told me of your trip, but didn't know your address, as you expected to be moving about and had left none. Bobby gave me your bank, and there I got your mail address in London. Then I had to wait for a boat back, they were crowded, I could get only a slow one. From your bankers here I got your hotel—and here I am."

"Pan rose quietly, took Frankie's hand, and led him out of the room. Would Gloria be equal to this occasion, she wondered? Tomorrow—A Dinner Party

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. FLORENCE STEWART MacNEILL.

It is with feelings of intense sorrow that we chronicle the death of Florence Stewart, relict of the late Capt. Lauchlin MacNeill, which occurred at her home at Wood Islands on the eleventh of June. The deceased was the victim of an accident by which a leg was broken and though the best surgical skill was secured for her and though for a time she seemed to be improving, the shock proved too great for her and early on Sabbath morning she yielded up her spirit to Him who gave it.

The deceased possessed in rich measure the gift of making friends and in the wide circle of her acquaintances the news of her passing will be learned with sorrow. She leaves to mourn two sons and three daughters who have the sympathy of the community in their sore trial and bereavement. The estate in which she was held, received striking testimony in the large attendance at her funeral. The services at the house and grave were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Mr. MacNeill. Interment was in Wood Islands Cemetery besides her husband who predeceased her by six years.

Dearest mother thou has left us. And our loss we deeply feel. But it's God that has bereft us. He can all our sorrows heal.

Inserted by her husband, William G. Bernard.

IN MEMORIAM In loving memory of Sarah A. Bernard who departed this life July 2nd, 1920.

In the churchyard softly sleeping. Where the Flowers so gently wave Lies the one I loved so dearly. In the cold and silent grave. Never will she be forgotten. Never will her Memory fade. Sweetest thoughts will always linger Around the Grave where she is laid.

Inserted by her husband, William G. Bernard.
