Anglo-Chinese Tariff Treaty Is Signed

(Special to The Guardian)

NANKING, China, Dec. 20.—Chinese circles claim that the conclusion of the Anglo-Chinese tariff treaty signed early today, is tantamount to de jure recognition of the national government. They understood that Sir Miles Lampson, the British Minister, will forthwith present his credentials to Chiang Kai Shek, chairman of the Council of State. This formality has been delayed two years because of lack of a recognized government.

It is stated that final ratification of the tariff treaty will be made in London. Britain was said to have waived special customs duty on the Sino-Indian and Sino-Burmese frontiers, in exchange for a most favored nation clause. Similar treaties were signed last night with Portugal and Holland, and the signature of treaties with France and Sweden is impending.

It is understood that the British treaty provides for abrogation of all former treaties limiting China's right to fix her own tariff and stipulate that Chinese and British nationals shall pay uniform import duties at all frontiers and that these shall not exceed those paid by other nationals. It is also agreed to abrogate all treaties limiting the rights of China in regard to tonnage due.

French Minister Visits Toronto

(Special to The Guardian)

TORONTO, Dec. 20.—Hon. Jean Knight, French minister at Ottawa, paid an official visit to Toronto for the first time today. He was welcomed to the city by Mayor Sam McBride and expressed his regret that his stay must be but two days. The French minister is especially interested in the University of Toronto. One of the first items of the minister's program was to place a wreath at the cenotaph, a kindly note of recognition from France of Canadian valor in France during the great war.

THE STORY

"Your voice, except that it has some expressiveness, is rather state of Maine, Gay said thoughtfully. "But you do not seem like the others. You are different."

"My father committed a faux pas," he confessed. "He married an actress from New York who was up here with the actors' summer colony one year. I," he said slowly, "I am the combustion that results from the union of Manhattan and the state of Maine.—It has been a warning to the whole state," he added modestly.

"Your parents—" Gay prompted, enthralled with his flippant tale.

"We were all out in a boat together. I can sort of remember it, though I was baby. Suddenly squall—boat went over—Strange, isn't it? They were both strong, able-bodied, good swimmers, used to the sea. I was a baby. But I floated ashore in my mother's arms. She was dead, my father was dead. But Rand came home."

"Oh, that is very sad." Gay's eyes had darkened with her ready sympathy,her slim hands twisted together.

He smiled at her. To hide her sudden emotion, Gay turned quickly to the serving of tea.

But her desire for information about this surprising person was limitless. She wanted to know about his education, where he had gone to school.

The grammer grades in the island schoolhouse, it seemed, he had persisted doggedly through, and took a great deal of quiet satisfaction in explanning that the three missing bricks beneath the window on the southeast corner had been removed by his own hands at the age of nine years, to facititate his departure from the seat of learning when the teacher reached for the well-known educational birch branch. The entire high school course he had encompassed, if not with honor, at least without serious mishap, in the city of Portland.

"And then, darned if I didn't go to college," he told her. "But don't blame me. I had to go. My late lamented Grandfather Wallace put it into his will that I couldn't inherit until I went to college. Left me an infant in arms, as you might say, the arms of a guardian. Guess who? The adminstrator, darn her. That's what got her so stuck on adminstrating she did such a good job with me."

"It wouldn't hurt you to go to college."

"Going to college would be simple enough. I had to go through—I did. —Bowdoin. I hated to go there, I was afraid I'd turn out a poet, I thought it was required for graduation. But Gramp was dead set on Bowdoin. Well, I went. It did me no harm. I've never even written vers libre. Though sometimes I feel it come over me all of a sudden—I feel it now when I look at you."

Gay frowned at him, but he smiled disarmingly. His was a pleaant smile. His lips were thin, their curve half-cynical, half-humorous, every sensitive. The vaunted mustache was but a shadowy outlining fringe. His skin had been fair no doubt, save for the rich coat of tan that covered him His hands were hard and brown small for their strength, smaller than her own, she noticed quickly.

When he said at last, reluctantly, that he must go and see Auntalmiry she went with him to the door.

"Come again," she told him pleasantly; " come often."

"I feel myself slipping," he said sadly, "slipping. However, I am no coward. I'll come."

Later in the evening, Gay went down to the Pier grocery, store On every lip was the laughing word, "Rand's home." But whereas before she had taken no notice, now she experienced acute interest, paused, breathless at the name, and drank in every word that fell from native lips on the subject of Randolph Wallace. The combustion of the union between Manhattan and the state of Maine was not entirely approved on the island, she gathered, but altogether loved although the island never openly acknowledges its loves.

As the dusk fell she went out, alone, unafraid into the little whispering forest, and walked up and down, slowly, deep in thought. The island seemed changed to her, warmer, softer. She felt vaguely troubled, vaguely pleased, strangely stirred. When her thoughts turned to the amazing young man and her surprising encounter with him her lips curved into tremuluous smiles and her eyes brightened with pleased expectancy. She shook her head at herself warningly. She was not deveived. She knew these symptoms. She liked but feared them also.

For the first time, the practical boyishness of her costume was distasteful to her, and when she got up on the morning after Rand's return, for the first time since she came to the island she discarded her knickers and silken shirt. Half ashamed of the instinct that prompted her, but none the less obedient to its guiding, she took from her trunk a costume that was one of her chief treasures ,a studio pajama suit, patterened after on improved Japanese style, all in black and fairy blue, the trousers long and wide, the coat which was really an over-blouse reached to the knees, richely embroidered, all soft lines and delicate curves. With dainty blue and gold slippers and sheer silken hose, it was a delectable studio concoction, designed for theatrical effect, inspired for the enravishment of an audience.

The Outstanding Chevrolet of Chevrolet History

-with Marvelous New Bodies by Fisher!

Only a short time has elapsed since the Outstanding Chevrolet was introduced—but already it has swept on to one of the greatest triumphs in automotive history. Never before has the public so overwhelmingly endorsed a new Chevrolet—for never before has there been provided, at prices within the reach of everyone, such a generous measure of beauty, comfort, performance and dependability!

The marvelous new bodies by Fisher—longer, lower and roomier, with all closed models equipped with adjustable front seats that may be moved forward and back to suit the comfort of the driver—represent the most original contribution that Chevrolet has ever made to motor car comfort and beauty. The hood streams back from the voguish new chromium plated radiator in straight, unbroken lines and blends flawlessly into the body contours. Body mouldings divide at the cowl line—giving a paneled effect to the cowl and hood that is both distinctive and pleasing. Concave front pillars lengthen and smarten the profile. And distinctive new Ternstedt hardware lends a final touch of custom elegance.

The great new six-cylinder valve-in-head engine was developed from more than a hundred motors that were built and tested over a period of four years by Chevrolet engineers. Not only does it develop 32% more power than any previous Chevrolet engine . . not only is it sensationally faster and swifter in acceleration—but it performs with a smoothness and quietness of operation that are almost unbelievable in a low-priced automobile. It idles along in the traffic line with remarkable ease and quietness. It leaps ahead at the signal light like an arrow from a bow. It takes the hills, no matter how steep, with truly astounding ease. At all speeds and in all gears, the Outstanding Chevrolet delivers its amazing performance, in the same smooth, effortless way.

But sensational as this performance is—it is matched in impressiveness by the marvelous comfort and handling ease that have been engineered into the chassis. The heavy, rigid, channel steel frame extends beyond the entire length of the body and rests on four semi-elliptic shock-absorber springs—set parallel with the road. The front springs are 36 inches long and the rear springs 54 inches—while all spring shackles are equipped with Alemite fittings. The steering mechanism is designed with ball bearings throughout, with complete lubrication at all points of contact. Brake pedals are correctly spaced for easy and safe manipulation. The two-beam headlights are controlled by a foot button located on the floor boards. And a slender, flat-type steering wheel fits snugly into the hands.

GENERAL BOOTH MAY RETIRE ON VOTE OF COUNCIL

LONDON, Dec. 21—The possibility of the end of the Booth era of control in the Salvation Army coming when the high council meets at Sunbury-on-Thames on January 8 next is being discussed here. The high council will adjudicate on the fitness or unfitnesss of General Bramwell Booth to continue in sole control of the organization founded by his father.

FROM ENDS OF THE EARTH.

If a three-fourths majority for removal is obtained on the ballot vote the council will appoint a successor. In this connection sixty-four members have been summoned from all corners of the world. This summons cannot be ignored. Officers must attend without question or delay, and must abandon everything, whether it be a matter of life and death, and respond to the summons by travelling day and night. No excuse is recognized by the terms of the summons.

Under a deed of poll drawn up in 1904, General Booth can be removed if adjudicated mentally unfit by a tribunal of commissioners, if guilty of notorious misconduct or if adjudicated unfit.

A sub-committee will probably be appointed to examine General Booth as to his fitness to continue in office, and when later the medical reports are received, the council debate on his removal.

The sealed envelope containing the name of his successor nominated by the General will not be opened until the machinery of the high council has been set in motion.

The grave issue involved is whether the army is to be constituted on a democratic basis and an end made to Booth dynasty. The General is at present in complete autocratic control of the organization. He must sign all legal documents, though now he is too ill to understand them and affixes his signature in the presence of a notary representing the commissioners. High officials declare this must not continue, because the interests involved are too vast.

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

A LITTLE SATURDAY TALK

CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS

In Europe there are people who have strange Christmas beliefs and customs.

In one part of England (Monmouthshire) there is a legend of a salmon which used to appear in a river each Christmas morning, and would let anyone pick him up and take him out of the river. He was a good-sized fellow, and would have made a good meal; but no one dared to kill him.

We may add that to our collection of fish stories.

In Poland it has been said that the heavens open and that Jacob climbs the ladder every Christmas night. Only the saints are able to see him.

In Austria there is a belief that a pack of wolves goes around each Christmas night, doing great damage. It is said that robbers have sometimes used wolf skins as disguises, and have caused great fright. When the people ran away, the robbers stole things from the homes.

In the German Alps people say that the cattle are able to talk on Christmas eve. No human being is supposed to listen to the cattle. There is a story that a servant once went into a stable and listened; and that he died a week later.

Other legends might be added to this account—that cattle kneel, and that sheep make a procession.

An Indian was once seen slipping through the woods in northern Canada. A white man asked him where he was going,and the Indian replied that he was on his way to watch the deer kneel down; for he had heard that they did so every Christmas night.

I am telling you these things just as stories about what people have fancied. I never saw a horse or cow kneel down except when it was about to go to sleep.
