South African's Oppose England

(By The Canadian Press) LONDON, April 30—England's national game displaces football in the minds of sports enthusiasts as the first match in the county cricket championship between Kent and Leicestershire is scheduled to open tomorrow at Gravesend and the South African eleven to play Worcestershire in the opening game of its tour.

The visit of the South African team stands out as the highlight of the coming season. England's poor year and again during the winter in the West Indies is causing considerable misgiving and the triumvirate who will select the teams to meet the South Africans in the five tests arranged will have no easy task.

RICH COLORS IN MARIGOLDS

SOW SEED IN OPEN GROUND AND GIVE THEM PLENTY OF ROOM TO DEVELOP. STAKE THE TALL VARIETIES.

Rich and velvety mahogany reds and browns, as well as crimson and maroons are the prevailing colors in French marigolds. The coloring is seldom solid but comes in flakes of an apricot, or with a narrow edging of yellow, when it is the dominant color. They are either dwarf or tall.

The tall African marigolds are a mainstay. The pygmy of the family, a little ferny-leaved plant with finely scented foliage and myriads of tiny brilliant yellow flowers, is known as tagetes signata pumila. It is an excellent edging plant for the larger types.

Son Like Father Stars in Tennis

(Following is the first of a Canadian Press series of 12 sketches of Canadian tennis and golf players who will compete in English and Scotch tournaments this season.)

MONTREAL, April 30—(CP)—A six-foot ten-year-old youngster who loves to practice tennis almost as much as he likes to play competitively, Laird Watt has reached the point where tennis authorities believe he either will go rapidly without or stay just where he is. He will enter for an international star or remain merely a good player.

The 22-year-old Montreal youth and Bobby Murray, also of Montreal, make up the male section of a Canadian tennis brigade that goes to Great Britain this season for practice and competition. The other half is made up of Caroline Descom and Eleanor Young of Vancouver, the country's ranking women players.

The tour will be of particular importance for Watt, junior member of the 1934 Davis Cup team. He is ranked fifth in Canada and second in Quebec. But 1934 wasn't his big year. The previous season he won the Canadian intercollegiate championship and the Quebec singles. He hasn't progressed as rapidly as was promised by his early form.

Watt was born here on May 21, 1913, and learned the game from his father, R. N. Watt, and Ted Green, professional at the Mount Royal club. Laird and his father have become the best father-and-son doubles team on the continent. They won the United States father-and-son title in 1933 and again in 1934.

A RADISH PROGRAMME

The gardener who does not plant at least one row of radishes in the spring is rare indeed. Everybody likes them, and they are grown the year around for the market. That more gardeners do not do the same is a pity, because radishes are far snappier when pulled fresh from the home garden, and they may be grown the season through as easily as the first Globes of spring.

The most inexperienced person can grow radishes successfully. Being an obliging plant, they really need no care at all, and will take root almost immediately. Like any other vegetable, however, a little care will go a long way in producing a better root. One bit of care is necessary—sow them thinly, and then thin them out in the rows, otherwise you will have uneven, straggly roots.

There are dozens of good varieties to choose from, and you can hardly go wrong if you buy from a reliable seedman. They differ in color, size and season, and you must be sure just when you want them when making a selection.

Mildness has been a problem with radishes for a long time, and plant experts have solved this problem in the swift growing varieties which are now on the market. The early globe type is noted for its mildness, but several types of summer and winter radishes have developed a surprising similarity in taste to the earliest crops.

Wood Largely Used as Fuel

OTTAWA, April 30—The use of wood for fuel continues to be one of its major uses in Canada, according to figures issued by the Forest Service, Department of the Interior. In the latest edition of their publication, "Forest Facts", the annual consumption of wood for this purpose in the Dominion is estimated at somewhat more than 900 million cubic feet out of a total consumption of wood of over 2,800 million cubic feet. During the last few years, for economic reasons, this quantity has tended to increase.
