OF UNIVERSAL APPLICATION

The Modest Hero—"The Stone Which the Builders Rejected, the Same Is Become the Head of the Corner"—Story of Heroism and Self-Sacrifice the Theme of Rev. Dr. Talmage's Patriotic Jubilee Talk.

He had a consecrated, noble Christian heart, as well as a clear brain. He was a gospel missionary who was ready, if necessary, to die for his death he could only accomplish the work which God had given him to do. In order to save Oregon for the Union, in midwinter, alone, he rode straight across this continent. He defied the warlike elements as well as savage tribes, the terrors of the snows and the precipices and even as well as the Indian tomahawk!

But, as I take a step further in my study of this remarkable Oregon builder, I find, as with Marcus Whitman, the greatest of men at all times, the gentlest of men. Furthermore, I find that the seemingly unimportant incidents of their lives, which they did out of the pureness and nobility of their hearts, have sometimes had the most far reaching effects in their ultimate triumphs.

Not only do we admire Marcus Whitman as a patriot and a hero, but as a remarkable fact that his public success was in no small degree due to the qualities he displayed in his private life. Do you ask how the one could contribute to the other? I answer by rapidly drawing three verbal pictures. Scene the first: We are now standing in the little village church of Prattsburg, in the central part of New York State. It is in the winter of 1836; February is the month. A rather short, heavily built man of reddish hair and beard, with determination marked upon every lineament of his face, is the bridegroom. Dr. Marcus Whitman is his name. A sweet faced young lady, Narcissa Prentiss, daughter of Judge Prentiss, is the bride. In the presence of their village friends the young couple become one. The congratulations are spoken. The words of farewell are now said. The bride and groom turn their faces west and the long bridal trip of 3,000 miles commenced.

Scene the second: We are now at the frontier station of Fort Laramie, of the Platte River. The little caravan of transcontinental travelers are here told that they must unload their wagons and strap all their goods upon pack mules and horses of the wagon had ever yet crossed the mountains and no wagon could. Up to this year no white woman had ever crossed the continent. There were two brides in that party. The one was the young wife of Marcus Whitman; the other was the bride of his missionary associate, Rev. Samuel Parker by name. "I tell you that wagon cannot go through," I hear one of the rough members of the caravan say. I now see a set look upon the face of Dr. Whitman. His jaws snap shut with the grip of a steel trap. Then a giant comes into his eye as he says: "But I tell you that wagon will go through. Those ladies, my wife and Mrs. Parker, must not be compelled to ride horseback all that way." A muttered oath comes from the lips of the rough man at the fort as he says: "All right. We will try to pull it through." And pull and push and lift that wagon through those mountains and across the prairies to lighten the journey of two young women who as brides accompany their husbands to faroff missionary fields.

Scene the third: It is the year 1843. We are now standing in the White House of our national capital. The president of the United States is John Tyler. He is smooth faced, tall and spare of frame. The second member of this notable group has a huge, massive body, a lionine face. He is one with looks expressive of the description given by a famous English jurist: "He is the most magnificent physical as well as mental specimen of his day and generation." He is the questioner. He is Daniel Webster. The third member of the group looks like a rough mountaineer. He is clad in skins. His hair is uncut. But he is one of the immortals of his day. He is Marcus Whitman.

As we stand in the corner of the room I see a strange scene. Tyler and Webster, the two leaders of the American Government are being driven back and back from their old positions of statecraft by this seemingly untutored man of the backwoods. Then, like Paul before Agrippa, I see Marcus Whitman stop for a moment and hear him say: "Mr. Secretary, you know not what you are doing. Better, far better, barter away all the wealth and the sovereignty of the New England states for a few Newfoundland cod, than surrender to England the priceless treasures of Oregon and the strategic position of the Far Northwest."

"Bah," answered Daniel Webster with scorn, "what is the use of Oregon to the Union? That land is wholly inaccessible. A wagon road could never be built across these mountains." Then, as Richelieu turned upon his king, I see Whitman turn, and hear him triumphantly say: "Mr. Secretary, that is a grand mistake that has been made by listening to interested persons. Six years ago I was told that there was no wagon road to Oregon, and it was impossible to take a wagon there, and yet, in spite of pleadings and almost threats, I took a wagon over that road, and have it now." "Is that so?" said Webster. "Then Oregon must be saved to the Union." And so I find in these few words, that the devotion which Marcus Whitman gave to his wife by compelling the men to carry his wagon over the Rocky Mountains was one of the mighty means of helping to save

Oregon to the Union. It proved that the Far Northwest and the east were not separated by impassable barriers. And it furthermore proved that all men's greatest and truest successes are always dependent upon their faithfulness in the common duties of ordinary life. Marcus Whitman's love for his country is today associated with the pure love which he bore Narcissa Prentiss. The true successes by which we will be able perhaps to do some great act for our country will be dependent upon how we fulfill the little duties of everyday domestic existence.

I could not eat without suffering intense agony, and had given up to die before using the Tablets. I felt relief from the first and after the use of five boxes am well and strong."

HIS LAST HOPE REALIZED.

[From the Sentinel, Gebo, Mont.]
In the first opening of Oklahoma to settlers in 1890, the editor of this paper was among the many seekers after fortune who made the big race one fine day in April. During his traveling about and afterwards his camping upon his claim, he encountered much bad water, which, together with the severe heat, gave him a severe diarrhoea which it seemed almost impossible to check, and along in June the case became so bad he expected to die. One day one of his neighbors brought him one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy as a last hope. A big dose was given him while he was rolling about on the ground in great agony, and in a few minutes the dose was repeated. The good effect of the medicine was soon noticed and within an hour the patient was taking his first sound sleep for a fortnight. That one little bottle worked a complete cure and he cannot help but feel grateful. The reason for bowel disorders being at hand suggests this item. For sale by all druggists.
