THE OUTLAW

The Story of a Girl Who Didn't Want to Marry

By ETHEL LLOYD PATT.

Chapter XXV

I can't say that I felt I was a notable success the first time I went before the moving picture camera of the Champion Film Company.

As a matter of fact, I think I passed unnoticed in the crowd—which was perhaps the best fate for which I could hope. At least, I did not stand out as conspicuously ill-dressed or awkward. Instead, gowned in my mother's made-over wedding dress, leaning on the arm of a gentleman who was arrayed in hired evening dress, I sauntered back and forth before the choking camera several times in a coronation scene.

Then I was told to go back to my dressing room and get into street clothes.

I went out and stopped at the office, together with the other girls engaged for the occasion, and received $3.

We had been taken out to the moving picture studio in an auto carsmobile. We went back on the street cars. By the time I paid my car fare to the city and then out again to the suburb in which I lived, only two of my three dollars was left. Even so, though, I was of course better off financially—after one day's work—than I had been in the employ of the tailoring establishment. If only I could manage to fill in three or four days of each week with the Champion Film Company, I would be making better money than I could hope to earn with any industrial concern.

So I went home, happy enough, to mother; handed over my two dollars that night; and, since I wasn't really tired—but rather pleasantly excited by my experience—I helped to get the dinner, set the table, and afterwards clear the things away.

It was while we were both bending over the kitchen sink, engaged in this task, that the front door-bell rang.

Mother had been doing her cleaning and some washing and had on a huge gingham apron that was none too fresh.

I went to the door. In the half light that sifted through the trees around our home from the street lamps, I didn't at first recognize the figure on our steps. And then

"Hello!" said a pleasant voice. "I hope you haven't forgotten me?"

"Oh, Mr. Trotter!" I exclaimed. "How in the world did you find me? I'm awfully glad to see you. Come in!"

The young man followed me into our little parlor. I turned up the light and tried to straighten my hair with a few nervous touches.

"Have I got to come in here?" asked Hugh Trotter. "Am I going to be treated like company? You know, I went to the tailoring place where you worked, and nobody knew where you were—until I got hold of a telephone girl. She had your address. I've been thinking about you lots. I had to go up to Buffalo on a story—murder trial—and I just got back the other day. I wondered what had become of you."

"Yes" I explained. "I got fired from the tailor place, and Dora—that's the telephone girl you spoke to—gave me a letter of introduction to a man who is with a moving picture company. I got my first trial today. If I make good—that is, if I look well in the picture, I suppose—the man is going to give me more work. He pays three dollars a day! Of course, if I could get six days work each week, that would be a lot of money!"

"I should say so!" agreed Hugh heartily. "That is good luck! I'm glad I showed up. I know some moving picture people too. Maybe I can give you a pointer." He half closed his eyes and looked at me. "I believe you would make a good picture," he said, "you've got such nice eyes and such a pretty smile."

I was sitting on a chair opposite to Hugh, my hands folded in my lap. He had taken off his coat and was resting back on the lounge comfortably.

"What were you doing when I came in?" he asked. "Were you going out, or anything like that?"

I paused a monent embarrassed.

"Why, no," I said, "I was—what I was really doing was helping mother with the dinner dishes, but she's most through, so it's all right."

Hugh got up at once. "Let go out and finish," hesuggested. "I could help, too."

"Oh, no!" I protested. "Really it's almost done. I—I—really don't think mother would like it. You see—she has her apron on—she's not dressed."

Hugh looked at me searchingly for a moment.

"Do you know," he asked, "how I always thought my own mother looked prettiest? It was when she had her apron on, and wasn't dressed."

Without waiting for me, he pushed open the door which led into the kitchen.

"How do you do, Mrs. Birney?" he said. "My name is Hugh Trotter. I came to call on your daughter, but it's so long since I had a home—a real home, I mean I could n't resist coming out here with you. I hope you don't mind?"

Mother's face flushed a little, but, to my surprise, she wasn't really embarrassed or annoyed at all.

"Of course not, my boy," she said heartily. "Sit here and I'll give you a piece of pie. I made it myself."

"Oh, Gee!" said Hugh simply. "This is the life!"

FRANCE MAY USE MANDATE TROOPS

Proposes Plan Whereby Natives May be Used for Defence Outside Territories

PARIS, June 27.—It appears that the French government has not entirely agreed not to draw military strength from the populations of the territories over which she will hold mandate. Indeed the projects for the terms of mandate which France intended to submit to the present meeting of the Council of the League of Nations, but which she did not, following the adjournment of the question of mandates, provides that native troops may be used for defensive purposes outside their territories.

Le Temps tonight publishes an analysis of the project for mandates which, it says, has been approved by Great Britain. It says:

"France engages to drive no special military benefit from her mandate, except to assure local police and defence of territory. However, it is understood that native troops could, in case of general war, be employed for defensive purposes outside of the region submitted to mandate."

If this apparently contradictory provision means anything, it means that in case of another war with Germany the French could use native troops from the former German colonies, Cameroon and Togoland, which are B class mandates assigned France.

CANADIAN GOODS

TORONTO, June 27—The argument is still advanced that if Canadian goods are equal in quality and compare favorably in price with imported products, the buying public would give a preference to the domestic commodities. There can be no question that in many lines Canadian manufactured goods offer better value to Canadian buyers than do competing imported products and yet imported articles have a considerable sale in this country because they are widely advertised or because of the popular belief that imported goods must be superior to those produced at home. The hearings before the Tarriff Committee last Fall supplied abundant specific evidence that many Canadian products were equal in quality to the best imported goods and were obtainable at lower prices. Actual investigations made by the Canadian Reconstruction Association have shown that:

1. Canadian agriculturists generally purchase farm machinery more cheaply than do farmers in any other country in the world, and farmers west of Manitoba buy binders at lower prices than do farmers at places directly south in the United States.

2. Canadian boots and shoes, grade for grade, compare favorably with the best imported products and are available to the Canadian buyer at considerable lower prices.

3. Canadian woollen mills are producing cloths of splendid quality at prices considerably below those charged for imported woollens.

4. Canadians are buying large quantities of imported perfumes, tooth paste and other toilet preparations at higher prices than those at which Canadian-made goods of equal or superior quality are obtainable.

5. Canned fish, vegetables and fruit, generally speaking, are as low priced in Canada as in the United States or elsewhere.

6. Canadian-made kitchen utensils of aluminum, grade for grade, are unsurpassed by the products of the United States and Canadian retail prices are as low as, and in most cases considerably lower than, the United States prices for corresponding utensils of the same grade.

7. Paint is normally as cheap in Canada as in the United States or cheaper, after allowance is made for the difference in measure.

8. Confectionery and biscuits are lower priced in Canada than in the United States.

The above list could be greatly extended, but comparisons in the case of the foregoing articles will show that Canadian manufacturers base their selling prices in general upon cost of production and that they do not base their prices on the laid-down prices of competing imported articles.

It is time that Canadian people got away from the unreasoning assumption that imported goods must be superior to those of domestic production. Many imported products are widely advertised and by such advertisements a demand for them is created which gives them a sale in competition with the goods of Canadian producers who are not in a position to advertise their articles to anything like the same extent. Again many dealers carry imported goods and press them upon their customers because in this way they can handle more or less exclusive lines. There is little doubt that in many instances goods have been sold to Canadian importers at "dump" prices, notwithstanding the Canadian anti-dumping clause, by manufacturers in the United States or elsewhere who seek in this way to get their excess production or floor stocks out of the country of manufacture and thus to protect their home market. Canadian requirements are small as compared with the market in the United States and if Canadians are to produce at the lowest unit cost they must be assured by tariff protection of most of the Canadian trade. If it be made possible for United States producers to cut into the Canadian trade, the amount of business obtainable to the Canadian plants will be reduced and costs of production will be increased.

Board Governors Maritime Home For Women

Glendenning, of Charlottetown; Rev. H. Johnson, Rev. F. E Barrett, Liverpool N. S.; and Mr. L. W. McAnn, Revs. Canon Sisam, of Moncton and Rev. H. L. Dibblee, of Amherst; Rev. Dr. Jas Ross and Rev. D. MacOdrum, of Halifax; Rev. W. N. Matthews, of Millerton; W. N. Townsend, of St. John; Rev. J. A. Ramsay, of Moncton, and Rev. J. Sterling, of Bradalbane, P. E. I; Revs. C. W. Corey, Wewisville; A. S. Bishop; N. A. McNeill, Salisbury; and C. R. Freeman, of Charlottetown; and Rev. N. D. McLachlan, of Toronto.

The Board heartily approved of the offer of the Presbyterian Board to purchase the proposed site for the Home and hold it until such time as the other committees are able to raise the money to take over their share of the cost.

Committees were appointed to bring to a conclusion the matters of provincial and federal legislation required for the establishment of the Home. As soon as legislation can be secured further steps will be taken to put the Home in operation.

WOMEN IN LOW-CUT GARB MUST PAVE ZION STREETS

ZION, Ill., June 23—Zion's road repair force soon may be augmented by women, if Overseer Wilbur Glenn Voliva keeps his latest pronouncement against women who wear dresses which expose more than their necks to the "juncture with the collarbone."

Three women already have been warned by police and presented with printed notices, giving them a "reasonable time to retire from public view."

Last night at the Tabernacle Veliva issued his final warning. "The police" he said, "will arrest any woman in this town that goes around the streets halfnaked. I will not bail you out, either, and neither will your husband. You will have to pay your fine or work it out on the streets."

COCAINE TRAFFIC IN FANCE AIDED BY U. S. SOLDIERS.

Charged With Being Principal Agents in Smuggling of Dope From Germany

PARIS, June 27.—American soldiers on leave from the Rhineland are charged with being the principal agents in the extension of the cocaine traffic in France, which has reached such proprtions as to draw a cry of alarm and protest from the French Academy of Medicine. Dr. Courtois Suffit, who has made a special study of the cocaine traffic, its ramifications, methods and effects, informed the Academy that nearly all of the insidious drug was introduced into France from Germany by soldiers on leave on the Rhine who act as couriers for smugglers higher up.

He emphasized that the part played by Americans was less the subject of inquiry than the French. Recently, however, French customs authorities witnessed the frontier examination of incoming trains and gangs engaged in what has become a business with enormous profit. They have adopted up-to-date methods to evade detection. Not even soldiers on leave could pass the orucal when not only luggage is carefully searched, but seats, cushions, baggage racks and under the seats, and even the bedding of sleeping cars is investigated.

Thus on the Franco-German frontier since three months ago, smugglers have taken to passing across the frontier in airplanes which drop five or ten pounds at a prearranged spot near which agents are waiting with a high power touring car. Owing to the number of army planes making flights in the early morning and in the twilight the smugglers invariably escape notice.

Once the cocain which is procured easily in Germany at 300 to 500 francs per kilogramme, reached headquarters of the gang it is mixed in powdered borax, sugar or rice powder in such proportions that five pounds of pure makes fifteen or twenty pounds of mixture. This is divided into one gramme packages which retail from 10 to 15 frances a gramme, according to the agency and the clients's need. Thus five pounds of pure cocain costing, say 1,000 francs, is sold to consumers in the adulterated state at not far short of 100-000 francs. Small wonder, in the face of such profits, that the traffic is increasing by leaps and bounds despite penalties as high as 10,000 francs fine or five years imprisonment. The number of cocaine sufferers has increased tenfold since 1918.

Dr Suffit declares whereas cocaine itaking formerly was confined to habitues of night restaurants in Montmarte and similar resorts, it is now common all over Paris, the suburbs and country. Even school children become victims, and after hearing the doctor's report the academy unanimously qualified the traffic as a grave national danger and issued an urgent appeal to the authorities to redouble their vigilance to put a special detective force at work and inflict far severer penalties. The unfortunate thing is the business is so remunerative that gangs engaged in the traffic have now developed an elaborate and skilful organization. The police admit the leaders are hardly ever convicted. The persons caught are mere tools, invariably unaware of the identity of the men higher up or the real sources of supply. The method the smugglers adopt is as follows: One gramme packets made up in the most cunning forms, as cigarettes, for instance so cleverly as to defy casual inspection, are given in lots of 100 to agents at a fixed price of five francs a gramme. These agents, who alone know whence or from whom the stuff comes never partake of selling, but act solely as distribution centres. They never give the packets to sellers direct, but always through an accomplice, generaly a woman, who gets a share of their profits. The acomplice distributes in lots of ten or twenty the packets to sub-agents, usually bar men, waiters, etc., who pay 6 or 7 francs a gramme. They pass the stuff to the actual sellers mostly women of disorderly character, many also consumers, at a price of 7 to 8 francs a gramme. The latter dispose of them as stated, 10 francs and upward. They frequently are caught, but at best can only be able to inculpate a waiter from whom they bought themselves. The latter often does not know the name or address of the woman who supplied him and if he does he won't say, because the profits more than pay the fine, nearly always deemed sufficient on first conviction. What is more, there have been cases of vengeance upon informers, beatings, even killings, to bear witness to the long arm and wealth of the gang leaders.

The ways of the Paris underworld are dark and adventurous and a thug who sticks at nothing can easily be hired for 1,000 francs. So that the traffic flourishes and the police frankly declare it can never be suppressed until the dope stream is dammed at the source by compelling Germany to take measures to make the sale of cocaine to unauthorized persons impossible.
