Selwood Of Sleepy Cat

"I did not know him."
 "Ever know his son, Lieutenant Roper?"

"I never knew any of the officers at the fort."

"Were you ever there?"

"No."

The good-hearted surgeon began to grow uncomfortably warm in his difficulties. "Well, then, you never married anybody at the fort?"

"Never."

"Was there any other black-robe through this country thirty years ago, Padre?" he continued, with oozing hope.

The padre answered after careful thought. "No," said he.

"Doggone it!" exclaimed Carpy, knitting his brows, but reduced in the clerical presence to his one effeminate epithet; "I can't see how it is—and Bob Scott swears you are the man!"

"What do you mean, my Doctor?"

"Did you ever marry anybody out here?"

"Many of the Indians, of course, my Doctor; sometimes a white man—a trader or a trapper, and an Indian woman—very rarely a white couple, very rarely—usually on the steamboat. Once, camping on the river below Fort Pierce, I married a young army officer to a young white woman. But that poor man was killed soon afterward—"

"In the Roper massacre at Crawling Stone wash! My God!" exclaimed Carpy, the perspiration starting from his forehead.

"That's the very story!" He seized the padre incontinently by the arm. "Come!"

Before the two men reached the hotel the padre, urged to a brisk pace by his companion, had all of the story the doctor had. Selwood had brought Tracy up from the barn to the hotel, made him comfortable in a room, and was walking down the stairs when Carpy opened the front door of the hall and ushered his companion in.

"He's got it!" cried Carpy to Selwood, loudly, and before any one else could speak a word. "He's the man! He married them."

Carpy, in his excitement, caught the padre's arm with one hand to urge him forward, and shot the other like a semaphore out at Selwood. "He's got it, John," cried the doctor. "This is the man! He married them. He knows everything. Padre" Carpy turned to his companion and pointed to his friend—"that's their boy standing right there!"

Selwood had need of all his restraint. He stood, motionless, on the lowest tread of the stairs. The missionary scanned the serious features before him with composed and penetrating eyes. "Is this, then," he said, for Selwood made no attempt to break the silence, "is this repeated the black-robe slowly, "the child of my marriage of that young lieutenant so long ago?"

The gambler made no answer. Instead, he sat down on the stair and buried his face in his bandaged hands.

Selwood spent long hours that morning with the black-robe. He urged him to come up to the hotel and remain over night. But the old campaigner would not leave his Indians, and professed himself unwilling to risk sleeping in a room lest he take cold; he preferred to camp with his escort, who had pitched his tent down by the river—and could not be dissuaded. But he wrote out to Selwood such details as he could remember of the eventful night of the marriage of his father and mother, and gave it to him.

Next morning Carpy dragged Selwood into his office, planted him in a chair, and sat down facing him, eager to hear all of the padre's story. When the younger man had recounted it in full, Doctor Carpy told a story himself.

"John," he chuckled with much enjoyment, "I've been kind of mean."

"What have you been doing?"

"I've been riding the old general—told him the padre's here and proved all you claimed up to the hilt. Then I says: 'What have you got to say to that?'"

"What did he say?"

"What in blazes could he say?"

"But the old man's changed, John. He's broke—old age a-comin'." Then somebody planted a bullet close to his ribs last night, and that annoyed him considerable. I told him about you going down to Bartoe's alone, and leaving directions for Lefever to bring the teamsters into action, soon as you got Christie out. And how you cleaned up Starbuck and cleaned out the place and burnt it. Well, that pleased him. "Dash it, Doctor," he says finally, 'blood will tell; it will tell! The boy's got it in him.' Taking the credit all to himself!" laughed Carpy. "Could you beat that?"

"Now, John," continued the doctor, "I had him brought up here to the hotel. He's asleep now. After a while go up and see him. He wants to see you—"

Selwood shook his head. "I don't want to see him."

Carpy raised his chin. "Don't be a mule; that's some of your old grandfather coming out in you—not your mother. Some while later go up like a man and see the general—to tell you the truth, he ain't a long time for down here, even if he gets well of this wound—which I think he will."

Then, in Carpy fashion, he sprang a further surprise. "How you feeling this morning, John?"

Selwood almost stared at him. This was a question the doctor never asked of anybody under any circumstances; Doctor Carpy's patients were told, not asked, how they felt. But Selwood was ready for him. "I'll ask a question, myself, Doctor. Did you come out here in a wagon train?"

"I did."

"The first job I got west of the Missouri river," continued Selwood "was driving a team of mules."

"Same as I, John—same as me."

"I was a youngster—and you know I wasn't a husky one. By the time I'd driven those mules a week, if the owner had knocked me on the head I'd have thanked him for it. Everybody in the outfit was dead afraid the Indians would get us; after the first week I was dead afraid they wouldn't. I had sneezed and coughed and snorted in that alkali dust till my nose and eyes and throat were plum burnt up. Then one evening, after the hottest, scorchingest day I'd ever felt in my life, on the Platte bot-

Carpy nodded hard. "Hotter'n blazes on those bottoms, wa'n't it—"

"—somebody up ahead yelled! I was just about able to raise my head and look over the mules' ears. There, ahead of us—far away—I saw snow, the snow on top of the Rocky mountains.

IMPERIAL SUNSHINE

Puppy Foxes, raised in pens, get very little sunshine and, in order to offset this, it is necessary that sunshine in artificial form be given them. The ideal way to do this is by feeding IMPERIAL COD LIVER OIL FOX BISCUITS either in Biscuit or Puppy Food form. These Biscuits each contain Fifteen drops of the very best medicinal Cod Liver Oil, (so aptly called "Bottled Sunshine") which is exceedingly rich in vitamin content. In buying our Cod Liver Oil, we specify strictly August catch as that oil contains TEN TIMES as great vitamin content as that of May or June.

Fox Pups fed generously with IMPERIAL BISCUITS or PUPPY FOOD never develop rickets but show a steady growth and progress without any setbacks.

Order through leading distributors or direct from factory.
