Liberated French Appear United

IN SOUTHERN FRANCE, Aug. 23 — (AP) — If the people of Provence are typical of all of France, it is certain that the French have come through four years of German occupation as a vigorous people with confidence in the future and a determination to make the Fourth Republic something that will restore French prestige in the world.

Not only have the ubiquitous resistance forces waged a full-scale war against the invaders but they have taken over the local governments and have them working smoothly. They are maintaining order throughout the liberated territory in southern France.

On the surface, at least, there is little to support the oft-heard prediction that liberation of France would be followed by civil war.

The French, at the moment, seem united as they never were in peacetime, and class bitterness, which marked the days of the people's front, seems much less now. Hardship apparently has made Frenchmen more tolerant of one another.

Officials have been jailed in some localities, but not in others. The Mayor of Tourvas was ousted, arrested, then provisionally released.

The expected clash between Gen. de Gaulle's Provisional Government and the resistance leadership inside France likewise has not materialized as yet. French interior force leaders here invariably say they recognize Gen. de Gaulle as the man who galvanized the French into continuing the war and as head of the French Government.

The French are more restrained and less theatrical than the Italians in welcoming the liberated armies. But their feelings seem deeper and they are more inclined to weep as soldiers — especially French soldiers — enter towns on the heels of the fleeing Germans.

Towns are less battered than in Italy and the countryside is less despoiled, but food is short everywhere.

Medical Program Is Outlined

Since 1907 when the first Salvation Army hospital was built in Winnipeg great strides have been made in Canada in the field of medicine, especially in gynecology and obstetrics, until now in 1944 there are fifteen maternity and three general hospitals located in principal Canadian cities from coast to coast Army authorities said yesterday.

These hospitals are staffed with highly trained personnel, and patients are assured of excellent attention and the knowledge that the equipment in the operating rooms, and laboratories and X-ray rooms and kitchens are the latest that money can buy, they reported.

A new addition is being built to the Windsor, Ontario, hospital; a new wing has just been completed to augment the Catherine Booth Memorial Hospital in Montreal; and a new 150-bed hospital will be constructed in Toronto to cope with the pressing demands for increased hospitalization.

Last year 22,601 patients were admitted to Salvation Army hospitals and 12,234 infants were born. In most cases, hospitals are overcrowded and there is an urgent need for expansion in order that many who seek help will not have to be turned away, a spokesman said. In one Salvation Army hospital alone, no more applications for admittance can be accepted for at least five months, because the hospital is literally "jammed to the doors."

Another side to the service of the women who serve under the Army's banner is the provision made for unmarried mothers and their infants. In one year, the Salvation Army housed and protected 2,504 mothers-to-be, and 1,570 infants. A young woman, finding herself in difficulties, can always seek shelter and protection for herself and her future child, and she will find kindness and helpfulness at the hands of Salvation Army women who give them shelter prior to the birth of their babies, and also instruct them in the post-natal care of their infants.

ICE SUPPLY LOW. — Mr. W. J. Drake and Mr. Lawrence Hennessey, ice dealers in Charlottetown, report that the supply of ice is almost exhausted. Mr. Drake has emptied four houses and is started on the last one which will not hold out longer than the middle of September. He says that he will not be delivering ice to the shores after this month, and from there on, a lot depends on the weather as to how long the supply will last. Mr. Hennessey uses a different system from Mr. Drake taking ice from all four houses at the same time and now his supply is so low that there will be none left after the first week of September.
