Attention of "Guardian" readers is called to the "ad" in this issue of "Cameron's Home Made Bread." During the next few weeks this will be an interesting "ad" and should be followed by all readers of this paper, who will find the "ad" on the editorial page, and is never to be found elsewhere. The object of the writer is to call attention to this bread, to its quality, its delicious, rich, golden appearance, and to the health giving nourishment it contains. For many years the maker has made a study of bread-making, and today every energy is directed to the making of a loaf of bread that makes for health and strength. To those who have not made a study of this matter, it would be a revelation to know how much life-giving nourishment can be put into a loaf of bread from good flour, and pure wholesome materials intelligently used. All interested in good bread, should try it for awhile. Each day retail stores are well supplied with fresh goods, and in no case does the baker spare pains to have the bread as nice in quality and appearance as good, careful management and judgment will permit.
