FERTILIZERS

We have in stock a full line of fertilizers—both chemicals and factory mixed. The mechanical condition of our goods is the very best and we can make deliveries 100% perfect condition.

We believe we have sufficient fertilizers in stock to fill all our orders during the Month of April and early part of May.

Our package containing 100 pounds is meeting with great favor. The bag when washed and dried is very suitable for 90 pounds of potatoes.

Our factory mixed fertilizers are we understand lower in price than those in any other part of Canada. We consider that at the present low prices money spent in them is spent to better advantage than in the purchasing of chemicals.

Many authorities have strongly advocated the use of factory mixed fertilizers when one ton cost the farmer about $5.00 more than the cost of the same amount of plant food in the form of chemicals. Then the argument in favor of factory mixed is many times stronger when the difference in price is as now only about $1.50.

You can save 50c a ton by taking delivery from our plant.

THE IRON WAITER

An unusual kind of model train is owned by an Indian rajah. The track on which it runs is laid round the top of a dining table. The engine pulls seven carriages, each of which carries a different load, sweets in one, fruit in another, and so on. When the rajah or one of his guests wants anything, he presses a button fixed to the table leg near his chair and the train moves round the track to him. When it is within reach, another button is pressed and the train stops. After the rajah has helped himself from one of the carriages, he presses the button again and the "waiter-on-wheels" run into a concealed engine shed.

Though a receiving set may be in operating condition, a defective tube in any stage will cause distortion.

Senator Hughes Again Objects To Sweepstakes Bill

The following is from the annual report of the Senate debates, April 5:

Hon. A. D. McRae moved the third reading of Bill I, an Act with respect to Charitable Sweepstakes, as amended.

Hon. J. J. Hughes: Honourable senators, since the right honourable senator from St. Mary's (Right Hon. Mr. Meighen) became a member of this House, and since the practice of introducing important bills in this Chamber has been adopted, the dignity and informative character of our debates have been maintained, and I think the Senate has grown in the confidence and respect of the country. He has certainly the ability to lead, which is a great gift. But with the gift goes an equally great responsibility. The confidence and respect to which I have referred can be continued, and even enhanced, or can be destroyed. The Senate of Canada is the guardian of its own honour and usefulness. No other body of men inside or outside the country can injure it, except in the matter of appointments. If wounded, it must itself deliver the blow. For this reason and for every other reason that could be mentioned, great care should be taken in the kind of legislation it initiates and passes. I fear proper care and consideration were not given to the principles of the Sweepstakes Bill on the second reading; but there is yet time to redeem the mistake then made.

Distress of Nations

If there has ever been, in the history of the world, a time to exercise care with legislation of this kind, such a time is the present. On every hand there is evidence that the distress of the nations has been caused largely by the carrying out, in the everyday lives of the people—rich and poor—of the fundamental principles of this Bill. In fact this is admitted, even proclaimed, by the proponents of the Bill, and the strange argument is used that because of this whole-some universal evil, the floodgates should be opened still wider, all restraints removed and everybody given plenty of opportunities to become a gambler! The arguments that have been used—perhaps they had to be used—in favour of this Bill should be its greatest condemnation.

The honourable senator from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), who is a lawyer and can reason, declares that the vilest and plainest forms of gambling are encouraged and protected by the laws of our country; therefore this Bill should be passed and another statute added to the sum total of the evil. It is impossible to understand such reasoning—at least it is impossible for me. Perhaps the honourable gentleman thinks that through the passing of this Bill the evil will attain such colossal proportions that the people, in desperation, will rise up and demand the abolition of all laws permitting gambling. He must have some such idea in mind, but surely the better course for him and those who agree with him to follow would be to do what they could to get some of the worst of these laws repealed. That would be an honourable and understandable position to take. Even if he did not succeed, he would know that he had tried to do his duty, and I promise him he would have all the support that I could give him.

British Attitude

At this point, I think, it would be appropriate for me to read to the House a short extract from a despatch that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen this morning. It is headed, "Britain learns from crash." I desire to draw the attention of honourable senators to this paragraph:

"While the United States salvages her banking and currency system, political and financial Britain feels the repercussion in fresh demands for monetary reform and for stronger laws against speculation. The lessons of the trans-Atlantic boom of 1929 and the crash of 1933 have been by no means lost on British observers."

And this is the time when the Senate of Canada is thinking of passing legislation to afford greater facilities for speculation and gambling!

I am satisfied that many of the honourable senators who voted for the second reading of this measure did not fully realize what they were doing.

Some hon. senators: Order. Hon. Mr. Hughes: I will give my reasons. After the vote had been taken, some of the senators told me they had voted for the Bill because the Senate had rejected it twice and they thought the Commons should get the opportunity to reject it once. Others told me that they did not approve of the Bill at all, but they had been asked to vote for it and did not like to say no.

Hon. Mr. Casgrain: I rise to a point of order. Those honourable senators must be named, for what the honourable gentleman has just stated reflects on every honourable member of this House.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think the honourable gentleman should refrain from making such statements.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: If they are contrary to the dignity and procedure of the House, I will certainly do so. There is no question about that.

We may be on the eve of great changes, in many respects the old order of things appears to be passing. All kinds of remedies are being suggested for the cure or alleviation of our economic and other ills. Doubtless some of these suggested remedies have merit and are worthy of careful consideration, while others would probably be worse than the disease.

Hon. Mr. Parent: Is that a quotation from the Bible?

Hon. Mr. Hughes: If my honourable friend would read the Bible a little more carefully, such a question would not be necessary.

It is a time of unrest and strain, and therefore not a time when the Parliament of Canada should deal lightly with legislation which, to say the least, is of a very doubtful character. Not even the advocates of this legislation contend that it would promote honesty, sobriety, thrift, industry and fair dealing. It would surely have the opposite effects. Yet the Senate of Canada voted for this Bill.

"Past" Appointments

I cannot help thinking that if, in the past, as much care had been exercised in appointments to the Senate as in appointments to the Bench, to royal commissions and to other semi-judicial bodies, the Senate would by this time occupy such a position in the country that the people would instinctively turn to it for guidance in times of stress and strain and doubt. I do not think it is yet too late. No legislative body in this or any other country can afford to take chances with legislative responsibilities.

I do not fear for what will happen to Canada if this Bill pass the Senate and go to the Commons. That body will not likely make it law this session, and may never pass it. This is a private Bill, and private members' days in the other House are exhausted, leaving for the next few weeks only two hours a week for the consideration of such Bills. If this measure is sent to the Commons, it will be placed at the foot of the Order Paper and may not even be reached this session. I certainly think that in view of all the circumstances, this House would be well advised to refrain from giving this Bill the third reading.
