NEVER SO MANY WRECKS

VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass., Dec. 6.-"The shoals fairly bristled with wrecks," said a belated coasting skipper as he clambered on the wharf here today to get his Christmas goose and fixings.

"I ain't seen so many since the Portland went down. There's what's left of the Jennie French Potter that struck on Half Moon Shoal over here near Cross Rip a year ago last May. Then there's the sticks of an old two-master punching the waves near the Bantucker. Across the Sound on Bantucker Great Point, sits the Thomas B. Garland, high and pretty near dry. Guess they will save her. UP there on the south side of the Stone Horse, there's the top end of the masts of another three sticker that looks a bit like the Marcus Edwards, of Bangor. Webb' Robbins, of Harrington, was her skipper and knew every one on the coasts. These may belong to the Mollie Rhodes, of Vinal Haven, Captain Dan Robbins, of Jonesport, for both of 'em sailed out of here and met the big blizzard the week before last off the Cape. "This last schooner is over on the southwest end of the Stone Horse, while across on the other side is the Abbie G. Cole, whose fellaers were
