We wish to announce a prize contest commencing today that will prove an inducement to people to do their shopping at his store.

The prizes are good and any person can nominate either him or herself or a friend. On the purchase of any goods to or over the value of one dollar ($1.00), a written slip will be presented, certifying such purchase and this slip entitles you or your friend to a certain number of votes. In this way every dollar afterwards spent by you or your friends will roll up the votes and give the candidates a prize in return for purchasing actual necessities.

FIRST PRIZE—Blue Bell Cream Separator, manufactured by the International Harvester Co. and purchased through their agents, Messrs. Richard Grant & Co.

SECOND PRIZE—Splendid driving sleigh, manufactured by the Canadian Carriage Co. and purchased through their agents, Messrs. A. Home & Co.

THIRD PRIZE—If a lady wins, a mink muff. If a gentleman, a coon coat.

FOURTH PRIZE—If a lady wins, a $20 tailor-made suit. If a gentleman, a $20 suit or overcoat.

FIFTH PRIZE—A rubber coat for either lady or gentleman.

SPECIAL—The lady receiving the largest number of votes will be presented with a special prize of a $20.00 silk drop skirt.

The cream separator is on exhibition in our window today. The sleigh is ordered and when it arrives will be placed on exhibition in the show-rooms of A. Home & Co. The remaining prizes can be seen in our store at any time.

Every $1.00 will count as 100 votes, other amounts in the same proportion.

This contest will close Saturday, the 17th day of December. Read the following rules carefully:—

RULES GOVERNING THE CONTEST.

Every dollar will count as 100 votes.

FEEDING BEES IN WINTER.

Sugar-Sirup Recommended When Honey Store is Insufficient.

No one should attempt to winter a hive of bees which is poorly supplied with honey. Such a colony needs to be either fed or brimstoned. Only good, heavy colonies should be wintered. One can tell whether a hive has sufficient stores for winter by testing the weight. If the hive lifts like a box of bricks it has enough stores, but if it lifts easily, like an empty box, then it has insufficient honey to carry the bees through a severe winter, writes Allen Latham in the Farmer.

It is not difficult to feed a colony for winter. Dissolve seven pints of granulated sugar in about four pints of hot water. Pour the gallon of sirup resulting into four quart jars and invert these in shallow saucers, preferably shallow tins, like the covers of lard pails. Place them just at dusk either over the frames of the hive or about the entrance. Insert small nails under the edges of the jars to allow air to enter as the sirup is licked up. If the night is cold throw two or three sacks over the jars to hold the heat and encourage the bees to carry the sirup into the hive. Set the bees up before throwing the sacks over the jars. This feed can be given at any time till such cold weather sets in that the bees will not take care of it. The amount suggested is enough to take bees into early April.

All hives that have enough stores are to be protected for winter in the following simple manner: Select as many large bran sacks as there are hives. Open the bottom of each sack so that the two ends are alike. Have ready dry leaves, laths, small nails and hammer. Draw a sack down over a hive as you would draw a stocking over your foot. Before starting in place a small block over the entrance to keep the bees in while the work is being done. Fasten the edge of the sack along the bottom of the hive with a piece of lath secured by two nails. Let the sack come quite to the bottom at the sides and the back of the hive, but in front turn it up so the entrance will be left unobstructed. Now push leaves in between hive and sack, filling first at each corner, so that sack is free from hive on all sides. Pack in the leaves firmly all round and above the hive till the sack is nearly full. Then with some long nails or with strings gather the upper edges of the sack so that the leaves will not spring out.

As the hive now is rain will wet the leaves and make the protection worse than useless. Some waterproof material must be laid over all. A square of tar paper laid over and then covered with another sack is good. This upper sack should have its corners pinned down with wire nails. It takes but half an hour to get a hive ready for winter in this manner, and the labor will be well paid for. Thus prepared the colonies will winter splendidly in even severe winters and will build up rapidly in the spring to furnish early swarms or supers of honey. This protection can be taken off in early May and made into a bonfire, the sacks being saved for smoker fuel—the fuel of the very best sort to make clean white smoke.

AUTOS ON THE FARM.

Half the Cars in Some States Are Owned by Farmers.

Recently, at the automobile school opening exercises in New York city, J. George Frederick, managing editor of Printers' Ink, delivered a most interesting lecture on the modern use of automobiles on the farm, illustrated by many stereopticon pictures. Mr. Frederick first traced the reasons for the greater wealth of the farmer through scientific farming and the use of good machinery and showed the natural connection between the use of machinery and the auto by farmers. He told how by authoritative estimate there were now 76,000 autos in use on farms—about one-fourth of all in use—and how one dealer in an Oregon town of 5,000 population sold forty-two in one season. He said that of the 4516 autos registered at a recent date in Kansas half of them were owned by farmers and that out of 10,000 autos owned in Iowa one-half were owned by farmers.

Taking up the question of how the farmer finds the auto profitable, Mr. Frederick told of the great help autos are to the dairy farmers in delivering milk quickly and without disturbing the value of the farm horses during the busy farming seasons. He also pointed out how the delivery of milk by auto to railway stations has greatly widened the area of farm land in which it is profitable to engage in the milk business.

The recreation side of the auto on the farm was most effectively illustrated by Mr. Frederick's pictures, some showing the women of the family out for a spin for a midday change from household routine, others showing the farmer and his sons using the auto in late autumn to go on a hunting trip and still others showing an astonishingly numerous holiday gathering of farmers in autos in small towns.

Farm Abandonment Ended.

The age of farm abandonment is practically at an end, for the farmer has solved the problem of how to make a living for himself and family and at the same time accumulate a good bank account from the products of a small tract of land. New conditions require new methods, and this applies with greater force to farming than to any other form of productive industry.

A HEROIC PRIEST.

DUBLIN, Oct. 20.—A dramatic story was told at an inquest held at Dalkey, Co. Dublin, on Rev. Father English, of St. Mary's College, Rathmines, Dublin, who was drowned on Sunday afternoon. His body was found fixed in the crevice of a rock.

Rev. Father Walsh described how he and Father English went to bathe at Dalkey. After swimming about fifty yards they turned to come in, when Father English cried, "Help, help me!" "I seized his arm and dragged him to within ten yards of the rocks," said Father Walsh, when the heavy back-wash swept us out again. Three times I endeavored to bring in my friend, and each time we were washed in use on farms—about one-fourth of all in use—and how one dealer in an Oregon town of 5,000 population sold forty-two in one season. He said that of the 4516 autos registered at a recent date in Kansas half of them were owned by farmers and that out of 10,000 autos owned in Iowa one-half were owned by farmers.

Taking up the question of how the farmer finds the auto profitable, Mr. Frederick told of the great help autos are to the dairy farmers in delivering milk quickly and without disturbing the value of the farm horses during the busy farming seasons. HENRI BOURASSA AND F. D. MONK.

MONTREAL, October 20.—A very large audience attended the meeting called by Henri Bourassa and F. D. Monk here this evening as a counterblast to the Laurier demonstration last week. The Ontario street skating rink was so crowded that hundreds were turned away. Both speakers made speeches along lines which have been made familiar by their recent anti-naval campaign in this province and their utterances met with loud applause.
