NEW SERIAL—"Idle Island," by Ethel Hueston, a little spot for summer visitors on the Maine coast is the scene of The Guardian's new story starting next Saturday. The heroine is as charming as she is amusing. Watch for the opening chapter.

BISHOP RECOVERING.—The Rev. Dr. Haakeney, Bishop Co-Adjutor of Nova Scotia will be delighted to know that he is recovering from his recent severe illness and expects to be able to take up his duties again early in January.

KING'S COLLEGE.—In spite of the fact that weather conditions have not been good since the contract for the new King's College buildings at Halifax was let, the excavation for the buildings is now well under way and it is expected that all work of this nature will be completed by Christmas time. Then the walls of the new King's will begin to rise and it is hoped the whole project will be completed by December 1929.

TEACHERS TRAINING CLASS.—On Thursday evening, Nov. 23, the Teachers' Service Training School was held in South Milton School. Owing to unfavourable weather there were very few present. In the absence of the President, the Vice-President, Miss Jean Rodd took the chair. Mr. Court gave an interesting and helpful demonstration on Lesson Assignment. Next meeting will be held December 13th, at 8 o'clock.

ROYAL WINTER FAIR NOTES.—Spruce Row Ayrshire scored again at the Royal Winter Fair, just closed at Toronto, two cows bred by and developed by Easton Bros. in the class for cows in milk five years or over fifteen cows competing. Lady Clover of Spruce Row won 2nd prize and Lady Sybil of Spruce Row won 4th prize and in the Record of Performance class, Lady Clover came first and Lady Sybil 6th, ten cows competing. It is a matter of congratulation for Island stock-breeders that our cows win in such company when the best cows that money can buy in Scotland and the United States were competing.

THE FAMILY PHYSICIAN.—The good doctor is always worth his fee. But it is not always possible to get a doctor just when you want him. In such cases, common sense suggests the use of reliable home remedies, such as Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, which is wonderfully effective in easing inflammatory pains and healing cuts, scratches, bruises and sprains. The presence of this remedy in the family medicine chest saves many a fee.

Winter Sports Winter sportsmen find Minard's ideal for taking the soreness out of bruised muscles. Try a bottle.

TEACHERS STUDY GROUP.—The second meeting of the Bonshaw Teachers Study Group was held on Nov. 21st at Bonshaw, with an attendance of seven teachers. It was decided to hold the next meeting on Dec. 17, and the topic will be the Time Table. Each teacher read a lesson plan on the teaching of the story of Confederation, and a lively discussion took place, which was followed by the Question Box, Inspector MacPhail made several important announcements relative to school work.

BRIDAL COUPLE REMEMBERED.—A very enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart McKinnon, Highfield, on Wednesday, the 28 inst., when about seventy five of their friends and neighbors assembled to offer felicitations and wish them many years of wedded bliss. Mr. A. Duffet then called the gathering to order and in a few well chosen words told the object of the meeting and expressed the wishes of those present. A beautiful Coleman lamp and a purse was then presented Mr. and Mrs. McKinnon by Miss Laura Stetson to which both made very suitable replies. A bounteous lunch was served by the Ladies' present, and the remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in music, games and dancing.

BOY SCOUTS BUSY.—Saturday, Dec. 1st was the day of the first paper round-up, and although it was very disagreeable Saturday afternoon found many of the Scouts busy. The town is divided into four sections and a division allotted to each of the four Charlottetown Troops. The League of the Cross, St. Peter's, St. James and Baptists. Several tons of high quality paper was obtained, mostly magazines. At one place magazines had been saved since 1900 and were piled in barrels and boxes. These of course took up considerable room and were also a menace. The paper collected was sorted, graded and tied into bundles in preparation for shipping and now a good start toward the first car load has been made. Owing to the large number of names on our lists it was impossible to visit all Saturday but if the paper is saved a call will be made Dec. 8. If the Scouts have not called at your home and you have surplus paper call 1020.

NUPTIALS.—St. Joseph's Church Kelly's Cross, was the scene on Nov. 14th of an interesting event, when Mr. Bennett Trainor of that place married the lovely Miss Mary E. Monaghan of the same parish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis R. Monaghan. Mr. Trainor was for a number of years in a partnership with his brother-in-law, Wm. Dolron, in Battleford, Sask., but the past few years he has conducted a successful blacksmith business at Kelly's Cross. The bride was for a number of years one of the best teachers in some of our school districts in different parts of the province. Mr. Trainor is a member of the church choir, and the choir, on his nuptial morn rendered appropriate music and hymns for the occasion. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. P. L. McMahon in the presence of several of the friends of the contracting parties, the witnesses being Mr. Phillip Malone, South Melville and Miss Florence McAvin of Charlottetown. After the ceremony the happy couple took a brief honeymoon trip to the Maritimes. A few evenings ago a delegation from the C. Y. M. Society waited on Mr. Trainor at his home, and after a few introductory remarks by Mr. M.A. Smith an address from that Society was read by F. J. Flood and a gift suitable to the occasion presented. After musical selections by Messrs. Jos. Kelly and F.J. Flood, and a dainty lunch served by the hostess and her sister, Miss Adriana, the guests departed.

If Husbands and Wives Could Swap Jobs Occasionally, so That Each Could Know What the Other has to Endure, There Would be Less Railing and a Great Deal More Patience in Matrimony

ISN'T it a pity that we can't put ourselves in the other fellow's place now and then and get his point of view on things? Suppose, for instance, husbands and wives could swap jobs occasionally and each get a line on the trials and tribulations that the other has daily to endure—wouldn't it do more than any other imaginable thing to make them more patient and forbearing and sympathetic with each other? It looks to the average man as if his wife had a perfect graft in being just a wife and a mother. Man to stand between her and the world. Good house to live in. Plenty of food. Somebody else to hustle around and get the money to pay the bills at the end of the month. No boss growling at her all day. No cantankerous customers or clients who have to be jolled into good humor. By Jove, he wishes he didn't have anything harder to do than just to stay at home and take care of the house and the children.

YET if a man could live only one day of his wife's experience he would never again look upon the life of the wife and mother as a soft snap. He would find that he would have to get up in the morning about half an hour earlier than any of the rest of the family because he had to prepare the breakfast and that he would be the last one to bed, because he would always have to work overtime to get his daily tasks done.

HE WOULD find that he would have to do over and over and over again the same tasks. Cook meals that were eaten by those who would be the minute after they were swept. Mend clothes that would be torn again, nowhere, do endless labor that seemed to accomplish nothing and all to the ceaseless cry for more—other and to an accompaniment of the noise, fights and wrangles of restless, growing children.

AT THE end of the day he would find himself bored with the monotony of the domestic treadmill, tired, with frayed nerves, body and soul crying out for change, for something new to think about, something new to do, something bright and cheerful.

DO YOU think that a man who had held down his wife's job for even one day would come home gruff and grouchy and gobble down in silence the good meal she had prepared for him and sit up all evening as if she even so much as suggested going to the movies? No, indeed.

HE WOULD make an effort to be pleasant and agreeable and chirk her up a bit, for he would know that no matter how hard his work had been it was no harder than hers, and that he, at least, had had the advantage of working among other people, where he had some companionship and could see and hear interesting things.

EVEN if his feet did ache for his slippers he would get himself up once or twice a week and take her to some place of amusement where she would get something to turn her thoughts into a fresh channel, something to mull over as she washed the dishes and sterilized the baby's milk.

DO YOU think that any man, unless he was the meekest tightwad who had ever put a Yale lock on his pocketbook, would refuse to give his wife an allowance if he had ever understood the dependent wife role even for a moment? Never.

HE'D know just how humiliated a woman feels who has to go as a beggar to a man for every penny she needs and how insulted she feels when she has the pennies doled out to her and how it outrages her sense of justice that her husband withholds from her the money she has earned a hundred times over by her work.

SUPPOSE, also, that the wife could put herself in the husband's place. She thinks it a lark to do downtown, getting in the crowd, meeting new people and excitement. Going out to lunch, hearing funny stories. A life full of thrills and excitement.

SUPPOSE she knew the actuality of it for even one day. Working for an employer who continually found fault and never praised. Living in perpetual fear of losing his job. Or fighting with his boss against the wall for success in his business or profession. Notes to meet in the bank. Unscrupulous rivals cutting the ground from under his feet. Incompetent and blundering employees. The black fear of what will happen to his wife and children if he should fail.

ANXIETY. Worry. Care. Crushing burdens. Overwork. Exhaustion. Stumbling home too tired to talk, too tired to think, craving only silence and peace in which to gather his forces together for the next day's fight.

IF A woman would go through a day like that, do you think that she would meet her husband at the door when he returned home of an evening with an itemized account of everything that has gone wrong in the home and burden him with all of her household worries and troubles? Do you think that she would consider her grouchy and cross because he wasn't bright and chatty? Do you think that she would consider herself ill-used because he didn't want to dress up in his evening clothes and go out to parties with her?

I TROW not. On the contrary, she would draw him across the threshold with words of tenderness and sympathy about how tired he was and she would feed and comfort him and take her own amusements in the afternoon so that he might get his rest at night.

NOT many men are deliberately cruel husbands. Mighty few women are intentionally unreasonable as wives. Their sins against each other are mostly due to blundering ignorance, of neither one realizing what the other has to endure. If they did, they would be kinder and tenderer and make each other's lot happier.

IF ONLY husbands and wives could change places for a day it would reform matrimony. DOROTHY DIX.

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

THE CHRISTMAS FORTUNE ACT 11—SCENE 1

SCENE: Private office of George Sterling, a rather stout lawyer of the firm, Sterling & Carson. Sterling is seated in a chair before his desk reading a document.

STERLING: I'm going to get something out of this, or my name's not Sterling. That old bird, Barnes, was a queer duck, but it was nice of him

CARSON: Good morning. STERLING (hurriedly placing the will in desk drawer): Hello, Carson. How's the young attorney today? CARSON: Oh, I'm feeling fairly well. I have a case to argue this afternoon—a poor old fellow had his leg broken when he was hit by a truck, and I'm trying to obtain at least his hospital expenses.

STERLING (in a tone of contempt): Yes, and I suppose you're doing it for nothing. Lawyers like you make me tired—you take the burdens of the world on your shoulders.

CARSON: Well, not quite so bad as that. By the way, have any of the heirs of Simeon Barnes come to the office? STERLING: No, not yet, but I expect the kid, Helen Barnes, to pop in here with her aunt sometime today. I got a letter that they're coming from the Smokey City.

CARSON: Was it necessary for them to come all that distance Couldn't you have handled it through a law firm in their city? STERLING (his voice raising): Maybe I could and maybe I couldn't. Anyway, I'm handling that will and it's none of your business.

CARSON (quietly but firmly): I'm a partner here, and I have an interest in what is done in the name of the firm. STERLING: Poo! poo! Don't get excited, young man. I'm taking care of the Barnes will.

"I'm going to get something out of this, or my name's not Sterling." To leave his will in our hands so I could pick a plum or two. Let's see, there are five heirs, and a total of over $7,000. It's lucky we can figure in some costs. (He leans back in his chair.) Yes, the costs! Ho, Ho! But I hope that partner of mine doesn't begin nosing into this business. I wish I had never let him into the firm. Ho, ho squawish. (The door opens at the door.) STERLING (in an annoyed tone): Come in.
