A P.E.I. Seat?

His choice may lie between a seat close to Ottawa, of which there are a good number solidly in the Liberal column and a seat in Prince Edward Island which would be opened for him by resignation of one of the elected Liberals.

It was recalled that prior to the election some Liberals urged Mr. King to run in a seat nearer Ottawa rather than in Prince Albert because owing to distance and official duties he was not able to spend much time in that North Saskatchewan area. At that time Russell County which adjoins Ottawa was suggested and Mr. King disclosed he had been offered his choice of a great many seats. He decided to contest Prince Albert again, the constituency he has represented since 1926.

Prince Edward Island has been without representation in the cabinet since the resignation of Hon. J.L. Ralston as Defence Minister last November. Mr. King announced recently that a representative from that Province would be provided after the election.

He might take on the task himself, thus closing his service as Liberal leader representing the same Province as when he started. During the campaign Mr. King said he did not intend to contest another general election.

When he became leader in 1919 he was elected to the House for Prince Riding in Prince Edward Island and represented that seat until 1921 when he won York North in the general election of that year.

Georgetown Sailor Awarded D. S. M.

Petty Officer Ralph A. Hemphill, R.C.N., formerly of Georgetown, P.E.I., has been awarded the Distinguished Service Medal.

PO. Hemphill joined the Royal Canadian Navy at Halifax in April, 1939, when only 17 years of age. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Hemphill, 6 Cedar St., Pictou, N. S., who formerly lived at Georgetown for twenty years.

He was stationed in England in 1940-41 during the blitz after receiving his early training at Halifax. Later he served on the Prince Robert on the west coast of Canada, then as instructor in the Naval establishment on the west coast. Prior to D-Day PO. Both brothers served on the famous Skeena (before she was wrecked off Iceland last year), although at different times. Goering Places Blame on Hitler

12TH ARMY GROUP HEADQUARTERS, Germany, June 18 — (AP) — American interrogation officers said Saturday Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering had told them that:

Hitler gave the Japanese the German blueprints for a jet fighter, and these plans were taken to Japan by submarine:

Germany once planned to occupy Iceland and the Azores:

He himself had unsuccessfully urged Hitler to seize Gibraltar:

Allied air power assured the success of the invasion .

Hitler ordered the "perfect" German jet fighter converted into a bomber and "in your aerial warfare you had a great ally — in the Fuehrer" because of Hitler's decisions.

In the interrogations, which produced more opinions than solid facts from Goering, the one-time powerful Nazi expressed disbelief that Russia could afford to enter the war against Japan without endangering her post-war economic position, the officers said.

As for the jet-fighter the blueprints of which were given to the Japanese, Goering said "there is a big difference between looking at a blueprint and being able to do anything with it."

Goering was quoted as saying these factors led to Germany's defeat: Hitler's ignorance of the uses of air power; the unreliability of the Italians in the Mediterranean; the destructive force of United States long-range heavy bombers, and the over-all supremacy in European waters of the British home fleet.

Goering said the Germans failed to invade Britain after the fall of France because of the German navy's inadequate shipping space, an insufficient number of landing craft and fear of the Royal Navy, but expressed belief that an invasion would have succeeded once a bridgehead had been obtained because Britain had not enough bombers at that time.

Urged Taking Gibraltar

Goering said that early in the war he saw the need of taking Gibraltar by slipping down through Spain and assaulting that British bastion from the rear. The Spaniards, he said, were friendly to the Germans because the "Germans had saved them from Communism."

Goering said he used all his persuasive powers on Hitler, but Hitler could not see it and in his madness turned from Gibraltar and plunged into Russia.

After the United States entered the war, success for the Allies became certain because of the irresistible numerical superiority of the Allied air forces, Goering added, declaring: "the allies owe the success of the invasion to the air forces. They prepared the invasion, they made it possible, they carried it through."

Coolness developed between Goering and Hitler after the invasion of Russia, the former Luftwaffe chieftain said, and from then on, Hitler's enthusiasm for Goering's ideas waned.

Discussing V-weapons, Goering laughed as he told interrogation officers: "You were extremely lucky the war did not last another year, or that we were unable to start the use of our weapons one year earlier."

Research on the V-2, the "flying telegraph pole," began long before the war, Goering said, with the original idea of developing an express mail service between Germany and the United States.

Goering said Germany planned to occupy Iceland but the scarcity of airfields on the island made the venture seem hazardous. He said Germany was trying hard at that time to keep the United States neutral, and felt occupation would be difficult for the Americans to understand.

He said Germany planned to seize the Azores, but only after Gibraltar had been occupied. When the Mediterranean campaign was lost, the Azores were forgotten..

RESERVE JULY 18 FOR THE MAMMOTH PICNIC AT GRAND RIVER

Describes Effort of Roosevelt to Avert World War

BY LOUIS P. LOCHNER
Copyright, 1945, by The Associated Press

BAD KISSINGEN, Bavaria, June 18 — (AP) — Prince Louis Ferdinand Hohenzollern, grandson of the late Kaiser, asserts that he served as messenger in a confidential move by the late President Roosevelt in 1938 to preserve peace.

He says the President, by the early autumn of 1938, was so worried concerning the international situation and the possibility of a world war that he took measures to inform the German government of his willingness to meet Adolf Hitler, Benito Mussolini and Neville Chamberlain, then Britain's Prime Minister, in the Azores for a conference.

(In Washington President Roosevelt's secretaries and former Undersecretary Sumner Welles said they never had heard of the reported message. Mrs. Roosevelt, through her secretary, said at Hyde Park, N.Y., she had no comment.)

The Hohenzollern prince first told me of this mission in 1938; at that time I promised to keep it confidential.

(Lochner was chief of the former AP bureau in Berlin up to the time of the United States entry into the war.)

But with President Roosevelt dead, Hitler reported dead and his foreign minister, Joachim Ribbentrop, now in Allied hands, Prince Louis Ferdinand had agreed that there is no longer any reason for withholding this interesting detail of recent history.

This is the story of the Roosevelt peace gesture as he tells it:

When he and his bride went on their honeymoon trip around the world in 1938 they were guests of the Roosevelts and he had many confidential chats with the President on the dangers of Nazism and its imperialistic and militaristic threats. The President and Prince found themselves in complete accord.

Before the young couple departed for Germany, Mr. Roosevelt entrusted Louis Ferdinand with sounding out Ribbentrop on the possibility of a personal, heart-to-heart meeting of the American President, the German Fuehrer, the Italian Duce and the British Prime Minister. Louis Ferdinand said Mr. Roosevelt gave him the Hitler message orally.

Returning to Germany late in the autumn of 1938 the Prince prepared a memorandum to Ribbentrop.

Ribbentrop had not even the courtesy to acknowlege receipt

Then a reply revealing Hitler's attitude toward the President came in quite a different manner than the one expected. Christmas was approaching, so the young Hohenzollern sent a message to the Roosevelts thanking them for their hospitality and extending the season's greetings.

"Fuehrer's Greatest Enemy"

Hardly had the telegram been handed in when a Luftwaffe officer appeared. Louis Ferdinand then was serving in the German air force.

"I have been sent by Marshal Goering to demand how you dared communicate with our Fuehrer's greatest enemy," the officer said. "Our Fuehrer personally ordered the Marshal to investigate. Unless you have a satisfactory answer you will be discharged in disgrace from the Wehrmacht, with other consequences a possibility."

"What saved my skin at that time," the Prince told me, "was the fact that we had sent messages not only to the Roosevelts but also to statesmen in other countries in which we had been entertained..."

After this episode Louis Ferdinand ceased pressing Ribbentrop for a reply to his memorandum.

Liberals Seeking Balance of Power

LONDON, June 17 — (CP) — Sir Archibald Sinclair's Liberal party has insufficient candidates in the July 5 election campaign to have any hope of forming a government but contends it may nevertheless be the "decisive influence" in the new parliament.

Liberal fortunes have been so low since the last Liberal administration under H.H. Asquith during the First Great War that it was natural for voters to consider the 1945 election simply as a fight during the 10-year parliament just dissolved.

The Liberals, with only 19 members in the 615-seat House at dissolution, have opened a drive on that famous "cradle-to-the-grave" social security plan and one of the Liberal party's prominent candidates, led off with an article in the Liberal News-Chronicle.

"There will be amply enough candidates if the electors want Liberalism with a Radical program to make the Liberal party the decisive influence in the next parliament," he said.

A partial redistribution has added 25 seats for this election and the Liberals have only about 300 candidates. If all were elected the party still would not have a majority.

What its leaders hope is that neither the Conservatives nor Labor will be able to get an over-all majority. In that case a relatively small group of Liberal members could hold the balance of power.

Sir Archibald and Lady Bonham-Carter, the party's national chairman, both have declined to say definitely which major group the Liberals will support in that eventuality.

But while the party itself leaves the question open, the London press has inferred — without contradiction — that Liberal sympathies would lie closest to Labor.

The principal issue in the campaign is between the Conservative party's "free enterprise" slogan and the nationalization policy expressed by Labor candidates. The Liberals, unlike the Conservatives, have said they believe in nationalization under some circumstances.
