IN MEMORIAM

MRS. FRANK STEWART

A sad gloom was cast over Afton Road and surrounding districts when it became known on Dec. 7th, that Clara, beloved wife of Mr. Frank Stewart, had passed away at the City Hospital. The late Mrs. Stewart, was a lady of rare personality and great kindness, and her untimely death at the early age of 36 leaves a void in the home that never can be filled. She leaves to mourn besides her sorrowing husband, two small children, Evelyn Grace, and Gerard, also her sister, Mrs. P. Dougald to whom the sympathy of all is extended in their sad loss.

Dad Not Forgotten "I don't suppose you thought of your poor old dad all the time you were away." "Oh, we did, pa. There was a man at the hotel always grumbling about the food and every time ma heard him she said: 'That's just like pa.'"

WEDDING BELLS

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at Trinity Parsonage, Summerside, on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock when Rev. L. B. Campbell united in marriage Miss Rowena, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John D. McLeod; of Coleman, to Mr. Harry Stewart, son of Dr. F. W. and Mrs. Cannon, of St. Eleanors. The bride looked very charming in a wedding dress of brown georgette trimmed with eggshell lace. Her chic hat and other accessories matched her gown. For travelling she wore a brown fur coat. Miss Irene E. Murray, who attended the bride, also wore brown. Mr. Frederick M. Cannon attended his brother as groomsmen. Immediately after the ceremony, they left for Charlottetown. Upon their return a reception will be given for them in their new home in St. Eleanors. Miss McLeod was for some time in the employ of Messrs. F. W. Strong and Co., of Summerside and was well liked by her employers and the public. The Guardian joins a host of friends in extending heartfelt congratulations and good wishes.—S.

ASHES of ROSES

A Romance of Today By Joanna Cannan

CHAPTER V. PARENTAL OPPOSITION

"Well, Mr. Mossop," said John Gilmour when he had finally decided what should be done in the matter of the long overdue account of Messrs. Minn and Graves, "What happened in the end about little Miss What's-her-name? Did you find her?"

Mr. Mossop looked embarrassed, but he moistened his lips with his tongue in a way that he often did before meals. "Miss Bennett, you mean, sir? No, I didn't find her. On arrival in London last night, I waited for all the charr-a-banc and she was not in any of them. But she reached home."

"Well, where was she then?" asked John Gilmour. "I could not say for certain how she got home, sir."

"By train, I suppose. But, what I mean is, why did she miss the charr-a-banc?" Mr. Mossop moistened his lips again. "I understand from eye-witnesses that she went for a walk, sir."

"What, alone?" "No, sir, not alone."

"Who with, then? No one else was missing, were they?" "No, sir, I understand, that is, my informant tells me, that she went with Mr. Geoffrey."

John Gilmour's bushy eyebrows met in a heavy frown. "Mr. Geoffrey?"

"Yes, sir, I assume therefore that Mr. Geoffrey drove her home."

"I suppose he must have. Certainly I never saw him after we sat down to lunch. But we can't have that sort of thing. It was most . . . well, before I say any more I must speak to him. Thank you, Mr. Mossop. I am sorry you had all the trouble of hunting about and waiting for the charr-a-banc. I hope it did not spoil your enjoyment of the day."

"No, no, sir," said Mr. Mossop, with as much truth as politeness, for the beauties of nature possessed little charm for him and his speculations on the possible and preferably dreadful fate of Fay had considerably enlivened his long drive home. "It was no trouble, sir. I was a little anxious, that was all."

"I don't wonder . . . Hum . . . Well, if you've no other matters for me, Mossop, would you ask Mr. Geoffrey to come in?"

"Certainly, sir." Moistening his lips, Mr. Mossop went out of the room and very softly shut the door. John Gilmour leaned back in his revolving chair. His piercing eyes looked straight before him. His fingers drummed on the shining mahogany surface of his desk. He had not allowed himself to say much to Mossop—that was not his way—but nevertheless, he was furious. Geoffrey had been in the business for exactly a fortnight, and already he had started on . . . on this sort of thing. And with this sort of thing John Gilmour had not the slightest sympathy. He had absolutely forgotten his own youth. In spite of his serious nature, his very early manhood had not been innocent of a few frivolous incidents, but so wholeheartedly had he dissociated his better self from them, that they had come to seem impossible, and in course of time he had forgotten them. That young men were apt to make fools of themselves over pretty faces he was well aware. But not for the moment did he think it advisable or even charitable to attempt to look at the matter from the fool's point of view.

There was a light rap on the door, and Geoffrey entered. "Good-morning, Father," he began cheerily.

Mr. Mossop says that you want to speak to me."

"I do," John Gilmour sat upright and stared penetratingly at his son. Geoffrey was looking particularly attractive that morning. Yesterday's sunshine had deepened the golden-brown of his clear skin, its emotions

Flyers Prepare For Ocean Hops

NEW YORK, Dec. 14—Nearness of King Winter has failed to dampen enthusiasm of numerous groups in United States planning aerial expeditions across the Atlantic next Spring. At various airports in this vicinity planes are resting while birdmen complete the finishing touches for hop-offs that will not take place until at least four or five months hence. J. Errol Boyd, the Toronto aviator, who already has one crossing of the Atlantic by plane to his credit, is teaming up with Roger C. Williams. The latter also has flown over the deep. The old Columbia, in which Boyd crossed to England with Lieut. Harry P. Connor, as navigator, has been rebuilt in the Bellanca factory for the projected transoceanic hop. Boyd has been more reticent about his plans since joining up with Williams than when he planned to cross last Fall. It is believed the pair will endeavor to shatter the non-stop flight record. Another pair busy outlining plans for a long distance flight are James Mattern and Bennett Griffin, the pair who cracked up in Russia last Summer while on a round-the-world jaunt. Mechanics have rebuilt their plane and aside from a few minor details they are ready to fly to Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, on the start of their new attempt to circle the Globe as soon as weather conditions permit next Spring.

State Medicine Is Approaching

NEW YORK, Dec. 14—(Canadian Press)—A socialized system of medicine not unlike that presently established in some parts of Saskatchewan, is advised for the United States by a majority of the Committee on costs of Medical Care, headed by Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior. Dr. Wilbur replying to criticism of the report, says the medical profession is on its way whether it likes it or not to some form of community organization and urges it is in the interest of both profession and public to have the profession control this movement instead of leaving it in the hands of legislative bodies. The committee's final report is the culmination of an exhaustive study on a nation-wide scale of all the major aspects of Medical Service. The report, it was stated, "will provide for the first time a scientific basis on which communities throughout the country can attack the perplexing problem of providing adequate medical care for all persons, at costs within their means."

Accidents Take A Fearful Toll

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14—A toll of 33,500 deaths and injuries to more than 1,000,000 people was exacted by traffic accidents in the United States during 1931. The national conference on street and highway safety estimates the economic loss of the accidents, together with traffic congestion, at more than $3,000,000,000.
