Fur Farming

Raising Skunk.

In view of the rising prices of furs, all fur bearing animals, capable of being reared in captivity are being made the subject of special study. Many prospective fur farmers are seeking information regarding the skunk. This animal has not, in Canada, been very extensively or successfully reared in captivity. It has, however, been demonstrated that the farming of skunks is quite feasible. The question is mainly one of adequate returns. With the choicest skins selling at over $10 apiece, the time would seem to be at hand when skunk raising might be profitably undertaken, though experiment is needed to establish it on a secure commercial basis. A few of the more important facts covering the fur bearer are summarized below.

Traits.—The skunk is neither timid nor vicious and is easily domesticated. The animal is a fairly good burrower, but it is not fond of climbing. Its unsuspicious nature makes it easy to trap. It is generally nocturnal in habit.

Food.—Skunks are practically omnivorous. In their wild state, they devour large numbers of insects, including grasshoppers, crickets, beetles and caterpillars. In captivity, they may be given meat, fish, cooked cereals and vegetables and milk. The cheapest way to obtain food would be to arrange with some hotel to remove the garbage. Putrid or tainted meat should, however, be carefully avoided.

Breeding.—Only black or "star black" males should be used for breeding. There may be one male for each half-dozen females. The mating season in Canada would usually be March. The period of gestation is about eight weeks. There are from 6 to 12 in a litter. The young are born blind and nearly naked. They may be weaned when two months old.

"Descending."—The abominable fluid which the skunk uses as a means of defence is contained in two sacs, one on either side of the vent. At about five weeks old, these sacs may be cut out and the animal rendered as harmless as a cat. The operation is not absolutely necessary, as tame skunks are unlikely to use their scent unless badly frightened by some intruder.

Pens.—Wire fences for skunk ranches should be of 1 inch mesh, No. 16 gauge, poultry netting, about 3 feet high, with an overhang at the top and sunk 3 feet into the ground at the bottom and then turned inwards. The dens may, in suitable soil, be artificial burrows, which the skunks will adapt to their own requirements. But almost any sort of hole or kennel, so long as it be dry, will serve.

Pelts.—The fur of skunks raised in captivity is said to be inferior to that of the wild animals. This has been attributed to lack of exercise. The darker the skin and the shorter and narrower the strips, the more highly it is esteemed. Careful selection should result in fixing the desirable characteristics. Skunk skins should be "cased" for market. In the trade, the fur is often sold as "sable."

A. E. ARSENAULT,
Organizer.

There is no flock however watched and tended.
But one dead lamb is there,
There is no fireside, howsoever defended,
But has one vacant chair.

Let us be patient, these severe afflictions,
Not from the ground arise,
But oftentimes celestial benedictions,
Assume this dark disguise.

They are not dead,—those of our affection,
But gone unto that school,
Where they no longer need our poor protection,
And Christ Himself doth rule,
Inserted by family.
