Rural Adventure

By Iantron Dockery

"Well, it is not difficult to understand why," the other continued. "She is quite attractive, and for that reason she is coming with us."

For the merest second Lotus hesitated.

Like a time, surely, Lawrence and his men would know that something had gone wrong. No doubt the red-haired boy was employed by them to inspect the sedan and when he didn't return within a certain time they must have guessed his misfortune.

Hers too. She decided to accept her fate docilely and wait for future events to arrange themselves. But Paul didn't cross to the front door.

Motioning quickly with a crooked finger, he led them through the kitchenette to a door leading onto a long, ugly hall. The back doors of the other apartments lined the sides, with their respective garbage cans placed at even distances.

The passageway was almost a block long, and at either end a stairs led to a street below. But Paul crossed the corridor and opened a door. From the narrow aperture a steep stairs descended into one of the numerous warehouses in the block. A long black sedan occupied most of the space below them.

The officer motioned for Lotus to get in the back with him, the other two slid into the front seat and with a gently powerful purr the engine started.

Paul inched the big car forward in low gear. When it was only two feet from the door it apparently passed through an electric eye, for the enormous wooden door slipped upward to the ceiling and they slipped through to the street.

When Lotus turned to look behind them, the door was already sliding into place once more.

Paul drove with determination and unwavering concentration.

Since it was late, there was little traffic except in the downtown section, where he maneuvered the car with a sure dexterity. Lotus was in the scheme of things. Now she knew.

As they swished through the outskirts of New Orleans, the bell of a distant cathedral chimed the hour. Twelve o'clock. It seemed like a dozen hours since she had set out from the Cafe Duval, yet it had been only one.

Balch stirred uneasily in the seat beside Paul. So much time had already passed, he grumbled. When they were forced to wait at a crossing until a passenger train roared past them into the night, he swore profusely and in the light from the engine Lotus saw perspiration beading his forehead.

When they started again, Paul increased his speed and they tore along the highway, past thinning little communities of shabby board houses.

Suddenly, the horizon cleared and they came to a lurching halt beside a small shack on the water's edge.

The shack was a one-room affair raised above the tide level on heavy piling. The German lit a stub of candle, and holding it up to Lotus' face peered muckily into her eyes.

"Welcome, Miss Kirkman. This fishing shack is not as spacious as was my hunting lodge in the Black Forest which American flyers destroyed, but it has served its purpose well."

The little boat into which they climbed had all the surface appearance of a small fishing dory, but the silent speed with which it streaked through the water told her motor must be very powerful.

It was cramped, though, for the four of them and the officer even sat closer to her than the narrow seat warranted.

What was this man beside her like?

He must have led a lonely life for the past years. She wondered if he were married to some stuffy housewife and had a family in Germany. He didn't appear to be more than forty and might be considered good-looking in a fleshy sort of way. Probably since the war had ended he'd been cooped up in one of the unnumbered submarines, leading the life of the hunted, or spent his days hidden in the bayous near New Orleans, scheming and avoiding pursuit.

The breeze created by their passing blew Lotus' dark hair back from her face and she shivered uncontrollably, though the Gulf air was warm. In front of them, Paul and Balch bent their heads against the wind, but the man beside her seemed to drink it in as though it were some stimulating draught of life. He stared at her, obviously puzzled.

"You know, Miss Kirkman—his accent was thickening from whiskey—if you were to continue to help us, things could be made very pleasant for you."

"Could they?"

She decided to be casual, to play along, neither encouraging a definite business arrangement, nor acting hostile.

Duvar-Campbell Nuptials

A quiet but pretty ceremony took place at 8:30 Friday evening, Oct. 10th, in St. Paul's Chapel, when Margery Joan, youngest daughter of Lt.-Col. and Mrs. R. Hunter-Duvar, was united in marriage to Bert, only son of Major O. W. Campbell, Winsloe. The ceremony was witnessed by members of both bride's and groom's families.

The bride was attended by Mrs. Hilson Proude and the groomsmen were Mr. J. Smallwood.

Both participants were in the Services; the bride was a Sergeant in the C.W.A.C. and had served some time overseas.

The groom was a Lieutenant in the Navy, and is now studying law at Dalhousie University, while the bride has a position in the Pay Office, War Assets, Halifax.

The Service was performed by the Rector, Rev. James T. Abbott. A reception was held for relatives at Crowlands, the home of Lt. Col. and Mrs. R. Hunter-Duvar, after which the happy couple spent the week-end at the Charlottetown Hotel returning to Halifax by plane on Monday.

The bride wore a dark tailored suit with black hat and corsage of red roses, for the ceremony and for traveling a beige broad suit with matching accessories. The bride and groom received a large number of beautiful and valuable gifts including cheques from parents of both.

Hobbs-Stewart Wedding

At four o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, October 28th, two popular young people of Georgetown were united in marriage, when Mary Irene, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Stewart, became the bride of Albert Earl (Bob) youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. William Hobbs, Sr.

The marriage ceremony which took place at the home of the bride's parents, was performed by her brother-in-law, the Rev. E. R. MacVicar of Pownal, assisted by the Rev. S. J. Boyce, pastor of St. David's United Church, Georgetown of which both young people are members. The bride who was given in marriage by her father, entered the room to the strains of the Wedding March from Lohengrin, played by Mrs. Helge Larsen.

Her floor-length gown was of ivory satin, styled on princess lines with long sleeves, sweetheart neckline, and bustle back. Her matching accessories included a crown of orange blossoms and her bouquet was of American Beauty Roses. She was attended by a classmate, Miss Marion MacVicar of Charlottetown and Souris, who wore a pink taffeta floor-length gown with matching headress and shoulder length veil, and carried a bouquet of pink and white carnations. Mr. Arnold Hobbs a brother of the groom, was best man.

The bride's mother wore a gown of grey wool, with silver sequins. The groom's mother was wearing powder blue crepe with matching accessories. The guests were ushered into the drawing room by young master Stewart MacVicar, nephew of the bride. Snapsdragons and asters were tastefully arranged in the rooms, while pink and white streamers formed a canopy overhead. The couple took their vows beneath a wedding arch decorated with autumn leaves and creeping vines.

Immediately following the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served. The toasts were presided over by Miss Barbara Bowles, C. P. A., and Miss Joyce Lank, R. N., cut the ices. Serving were the Misses Dell Moore, R.N., Ross Llewellyn, R.N., Lois Brandy, R. N., and Joyce (Billie) Jenkins, all close friends of the bride. The table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake, flanked by lighted candles. Following the reception the happy couple motored to Charlottetown, where they will reside. For travelling the bride wore a grey wool dress, with green top coat and black accessories. The groom was a graduate of the Prince Edward Island Hospital has been a valued member of the staff of the Polio Clinic from the time it was a wedding at the groom's home. The groom is an electrician with R. T. Morrison. Before her marriage the bride was entertained by her class and friends at Cundall Home. The numerous gifts were both beautiful and useful.
