"NEVER KNEW IT TO FAIL"

I HAVE used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in my family for years and never knew it to fail to help. My four girls have all used it.

"I recommend the Vegetable Compound to middle aged women. There is nothing better for that tired feeling we know so well."

"It helped my nervousness very much, and built me up." Mrs. W. C. June, Gairford, Alberta.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—(U. P.)—It is time to get busy with the knitting needles if you want to be fashionable this winter from an economical point of view. Of course, if it doesn't matter—but it should matter how full, or empty the coffers are today.

Ambitions knitters will tackle whole suits and dresses. Those with less zeal will confine their activities to blouses and sweaters and the gauntlet cuffs of grand warm gloves to go with snow suits for winter sports.

Little crocheted and knitted berets and hats with that definitely adopted side and over the eye tilt, are done in chenille and also in very narrow ribbon.

Fur collars are high, wide and handsome—be they of the flat, expensive gailac, or the fluffy blue and white and more expensive fox. The skirt portion of the coats wrap around the body almost double and are cut up into a final point that is usually fur-tipped and flaps around nearly to the center of the back.

What Kind of Man Makes a Good Husband? Dorothy Dix

tude Toward All Women and a Careful Energy, a Good Disposition, a Tender Attitude—Balance Between Waste and Thrift—These Are the Most Important Signs of a Good Husband

A young woman asks: "What characteristics should a young man have to prove that he will make a good husband?" There are no definite number of points by which you can judge a prize husband as you can a blue-ribbon dog or a pedigree milk cow, daughter. You can't even measure a man up against the standardized virtues and say that he will make a good husband because he is a good son or because he is sober and moral and thrifty. Some of the most aggravating husbands in the world are the good sons who always remain tied to mother's apron strings and who are so much sons that they forget to be husbands. Also, there are men who live up to the strict letter of the moral law, who are pillars in the church and pointed out as examples for youth to follow, who are so cold and hard and stingy to their wives and who are so surly and grouchy in their homes that they are worse husbands than any warm-hearted, affectionate, generous drunkard or rounder.

All signs fall in dry weather and in picking out husbands. The only way you can really find out what sort of husband a man will make is to marry him, and then your knowledge comes too late to do you any good.

But if I were a young girl picking out a husband I would pay particular attention to the following earmarks:

First, I would observe whether the young man was a self-starter or not. I would note the amount of energy he developed. I would keep tab on the number of jobs he had and ascertain whether he was one of those who had the grit to stick to a thing after it ceased to be play and became work or whether he was one of those always on the lookout for some occupation that called for no labor in return for a fat pay envelope.

A man does not need to be making a big salary to make him a desirable husband, but he must be on his way. He must have got a start and be able to show that he is a go-getter, who can at least support a family. There is small chance for happiness in a debt-ridden home and no woman stays long in love with a man who is lazy and shiftless.

Next, I should pay particular attention to his disposition, because that is a thing that I would have to live with day in and day out, and it is the thing that makes or mars the happiness of a man's wife. If he was conceited and vain and required to be flattered and cajoled all the time, I should reflect that I would get very weary of spreading the "salve" for the next thirty or forty years. If he was grouchy and I had to handle him with gloves and walk on eggs to keep from offending him, I should conclude that the game wasn't worth the candle, besides which I had no particular talent for acrobatic stunts.

If he was suspicious and jealous and grew green-eyed every time I was decently civil to a man friend and kept me apologizing for offenses I had never committed, I should decline to commit myself to a perpetual matrimonial diet of humble pie.

If he was violent-tempered and went into rages in which he said insulting things to me, I would refuse to jeopardize my happiness by undertaking to live with one who would keep me in trembling fear of offending him.

But if the man was good-natured and cheerful and optimistic; if he met life with a smile instead of a scowl; if he had plenty of good, hard, practical sense and was willing to give and take, then I would hurry with him to the parson.

Next, I would observe the man's attitude toward women. I should not be misled by any glib-tongued youth telling me that I was an angel and different from my sex. I should recognize that for the blab it is. What I should observe would be whether he always spoke of women with contempt and pooh-pooed their opinions and generally assumed a back-to-the-harem attitude toward them.

If he did, I should know that as soon as I belonged to him I would become nothing more than a slave, and that when my youth and beauty fled he would consider himself perfectly justified in seeking a companion who was easier on the eyes. Moreover, he would always feel that he had bestowed such a favor on me when he married me that I could never repay him, no matter how hard I worked, and he would never think it worth his while to hand me a compliment or show me any little attention or even say "Thank you" for any sacrifice I made for him.

But if the man was gentle and tender to all women; if he went out of his way to do a kindness to a poor, old, frowsy scrubwoman; if he gave his seat to a tired shop girl on the cars; if he was as polite to old women as to young women and as courteous to his landlady as to his hostess at a ball, then I should know that his chivalry would extend to his wife and that she would be a lucky woman.

Finally, I should observe how he spends his money, for I should not want to be the wife of a waster or a tightwad. Both spell misery to a woman, and before I married any man I should get his views definitely as to whether a wife is to share fifty-fifty in her husband's income or have nickels doled out to her.

If the man believed that the husband should have a monopoly on the purse bearing, I would say "Nay, nay," for I should not knowingly qualify for the role of a domestic mendicant but if the man believed that a wife is entitled to her own individual money, I should conclude that he was making me a fair offer of partnership and I would make haste to sign the contract.

These be certain signs and portents of a god husband. There are others, but these are the most important. DOROTHY DIX.

WITH ALMA ARCHER

There's an old Italian custom of stealing the traditional "40 winks," or "cat naps," under a charming, colorful throw made in Bellagio, Italy.

These are available, and reasonable, too, in New York, and are just the dish for that siesta on the terrace, chaise longue, couch, or where have you been.

Probably all doctors and practitioners agree that women need bigger and better relaxation in these restless, jittery times of insomnia, and these bee-u-tiful throws are the best inducement I know. Of silk and cotton, they come in amazingly attractive color combinations, with effective stripings in either brilliant Basque shades or pastels.

The bias cut of this new slip actually shapes the figure and lends charming slimmness to the outer garment.

The wrap-over arrangement at the back makes it shadow proof, and gives freedom in its added width without detracting from its slenderness.

Another modish point is the bias cut of the upper edge so comfortable and slimming to neckline.
