

The Union Jack
It's only a small bit of bunting,
It's only an old colored rag,
Yet thousands have died for its honor
And shed their best blood for the flag.
It's charged with the cross of St. Andrew,
Which of old, Scotland's heroes
Have led;
It carries the cross of St. Patrick,
For which Ireland's bravest have Died.
Joined with these is our old English
Ensign,
Britons conquer or die, but never yield.
It flutters triumphant o'er ocean,
As free as the winds and the waves;
And bondsman from shackles un-loosened
'Neath its shadows no longer are slaves.
It floats o'er Cyprus and Malta,
O'er Canada, the Indies, Hong Kong;
And Britons, wherever their flag's flying
Claim the rights which to Britons belong.
We hoist it to show our devotion,
To our King, to our country, and its outward and visible emblem
Of advancement and Liberty's cause.
You may say it's an old bit of bunt-
ing,
But Freedom has made it majestic,
And time has ennobled the flag.

RATS IN MANITOBA
Efforts to Stamp Out Pests Which Cause Immense Losses

The Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba estimated the damage done by the brown rat at a million dollars a year. According to the report of the government inspectors, the rats in the province move in a radius of fifteen miles each year. A few years ago the Department produced a virus that it was thought would eliminate the pest. There was quite a considerable amount of interest at first, and many applications were made for the virus. Thousands of rats were destroyed by its use. But, by and by, the public interest lagged.
At Gretna, Mr. J. J. Golden conducted some interesting experiments in order to determine the amount of food a rat would consume per day, and at the same time to test the virus. A number of rats were caught alive in the traps and fed, and while the amount of food consumed varied, Mr. Golden demonstrated beyond peradventure of a doubt the efficacy of the virus in the following manner:
Two rats were caught and one of them received an injection of the virus. Within two days it died while the other rat, not having been provided with food, proceeded to devour its dead comrade. Within twenty-four hours it had consumed all of the dead rat, with the exception of an inch of the tail, and it succumbed, within a few hours, to the poison which had been injected into the other rat.
Among other interesting experiments, Mr. Golden found that the rats, while mainly confining themselves to the cities and towns, made frequent visits into the fields and destroyed quantities of grain. Near the southern border of Manitoba a farmer found sixteen rats in a shock of corn in the spring, which demonstrated that this colony had lived in this particular place throughout the winter, and had fed upon the grain and the cornstalks.

Working For Jim Hill
One of the pioneers in the development of the northwest tells a story illustrative of the great prominence of James J. Hill in the early days of the building of railroads and settlement of the northwestern states. The story is of a Swede attending a revival meeting of the old-fashioned kind, one in which the revivalists excited the emotions, got the converts shouting, and resorted to personal exhortation. The Swede sat stolid, while half of the audience was weeping, confessing, or shouting hallelujah. One of the preachers tried a personal appeal.
"Work for the Lord!" he shouted.
"Come forward, Ole! Come forward. Won't you work for the Lord?"
"Naw," drawled the Swede impassively. "Aye dank not! Aye ban got good job by Yim Hill!"

The Aborigines of Australia
The aborigines of Australia are of a distinct race from that which inhabits the Indian Archipelago, and are black, with some slight variety of shade from brown-black to jet. Their hair is curly, but is not the crisp wool of the negro. Their faces are well developed broad at the base; their lips less protruding than those of the negro. Their bodies are deficient in muscularity and strength, but are capable of great endurance. It is said that they readily adopt European habits. These natives seldom build huts or other fixed dwellings, but use as a shelter a strip of bark or a large bough. The Australian aborigines are said to be rapidly decreasing in number, and it is thought that many years will not elapse before they are extinct.

OLD QUEBEC DAYS

Bostonians Invasion Recalled by Finding of Rebel's Expense Book

Mr. Thomas O'Leary, assistant librarian at the Chateau de Ramezay, Montreal, unearthed a very interesting document, the "Expense Book of John Halstead, Commissary under Benedict Arnold, before Quebec, 1776-76." It consists of the manuscript expense book of the Commissary under Benedict Arnold when in command at Quebec after the death of Montgomery. It is a pocket memorandum, measuring three and one half by four, and one half inches. The entries commence 8th February, 1776 and end May 17th, 1776. They go to show that large sums of money were disbursed for the purchase of beef and other supplies, and that, to give the invader his due, he paid his way, to this extent at least, and did not arrive at the expense of the inhabitants, as it may possibly have been assumed. The little book is in excellent condition, when it is remembered that it was with difficulty that the American soldiers at Quebec took even their bodies back. The wonder is that the book should have survived the perils and dangers of that unfortunate expedition. But, more wonderful is the fact, that the book should have found its way back to the very locality at Quebec, where it had been in 1775, and then to the Chateau de Ramezay, the headquarters of the Continental army in 1775-76.

Although this account of purchases of provisions for "Les Bostonnais," is nameless as to signature, it can be no other but that of John Halstead, a Quebec rebel. It gives the names of his comrades who were not doubt chased out of Quebec with him by Lieut.-Governor Cramahé and General Carleton.

According to Historical Document No. 8, of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, John Dyer Mercier and John Halstead, two citizens of Quebec, purchased in the year 1774, a water lot on the river St. Lawrence, under Cape Diamond at Quebec. On this they constructed a wharf 130 feet long, and in the fall of 1775 put up the frame work of a strong warehouse. The invasion of the Bostonians stopped the work of construction by the hurried flight of Messrs. Mercier and Halstead, who were rebels. The former seems to have been a particularly trusted friend of Arnold, who sent him a letter on the 10th October, 1775, from Dead River by the hands of an Indian named Aeneas, informing Mercier of his coming with 2,000 men to attack Quebec, and requesting him to forward provisions and supplies to the Chaudiere river. Fortunately this letter was delivered to Lieut.-Governor Cramahé.

This probably accelerated Mercier's exit from Quebec, if Cramahé's proclamation of 12th September had not already done it. However, nothing more was heard of Mercier until the end of the war, when he petitioned the Governor through his agent, Deschenaux, for the return of his property. Nothing was heard of the two rebels until 1784, when they jointly laid claim to their property, demanding from the Government rent for its use since they abandoned it; also compensation for the frame work of the store which Carleton had used for construction of batteries, etc., behind the Hotel Dieu, St. John's and St. Louis gates.
They claimed $1,200 damages from the Government but the final award, made after a long delay in 1797, was $4,425, from which the Government deducted the total cost of the improvements to the property, $3,885, leaving to Halstead and Mercier, a balance of $440.

Starving in Big City

Starving to death, Napoleon Lemay, a 18-year-old lad, was discovered in a box car in the Montreal railway yard. He was in a pitiable state of wretchedness and almost dead. An officer saw him enter the car, where the boy said he expected to die. His parents live in the United States.
In the police court he told a terrible tale of suffering to Judge Lantot. He said he could find no work and had been living on bread crusts. But for two days he had been unable to find a single scrap of food. "Do what you will with me," he cried, "only give me a bite to eat."
The old judge was much affected by the sight. There was only one thing he could do and he fined the lad one dollar or two days in jail.

Snails for Food in Favor

Snails are not as a rule looked upon as luxuries outside of France. The average Englishman regards garden worms with repugnance. Yet in Bristol there is a large and growing trade done in edible snails, and shellfish dealers are clamoring for more than they can possibly obtain. There are between thirty and forty shops in Bristol where cooked snails may be bought, but such is the demand that in the near future snails may become the luxury of the rich. Of course, the eating of snails is an acquired taste, but the habit of eating them, according to Bristol folk, seems to grow rapidly once the repugnance to making a beginning is overcome.

By the Rev. R. M. Dickey, of Selkirk, Manitoba, formerly a Pioneer Missionary to the Yukon.
Selkirk, May 28th, 1904.
Dear Dr. McTaggart:
"I would give all that I possess in the world, if you could bring me to the end of this road, I am travelling." I said an inebriate, to me one night when I offered to accompany him to the end of his street.
He was a man of excellent qualities with a good business, a comfortable home and a promising family, but he had become a slave to strong drink, and the end seemed inevitably drawing near. My heart was sore for him. I prayed with him and for him—what more could I do?
That night my mail contained a pamphlet regarding treatment of inebriates by Dr. McTaggart, of Toronto. At any other time I would have thrown it in the waste paper basket, but the thought of my friend was then uppermost in my mind.
On glancing at the first cover, my eye caught the names of Sir W. R. Meredith, Premier Ross, Dr. Potts, Prince of Wales, on Father Teefy and E. S. ...atman. These men would not lend their names to anything that they did not believe in. I thought, "there may be something in this."

The sentence, "Drunkennes is a disease and is so recognized by the leading medical authorities of the world," arrested my attention, for it agreed with my own conclusions from long experience in active temperance work.
After carefully reading the pamphlet, from beginning to end, I came to the conclusion that the treatment would at least be worth a trial.
Next morning I went to my inebriate friend and offered to send for it if he would agree to take it faithfully. He readily consented, for he was willing to try anything that might free him from such bondage. In a week the medicine arrived. No one knew anything about it but ourselves. That man says he never tasted intoxicating liquor since he commenced the treatment, and his perfect health, prosperous business and happy home confirms the statement. He tells me that he has absolutely no desire for strong drink and no difficulty whatever in refusing treats.
In order to put it to a thorough test I next approached a most confirmed drunkard—a man, college bred, who had gone through a considerable fortune, whose family life was ruined and himself a physical wreck. He was induced to take this treatment. After a few days he showed marked improvement in general health. In a week he was so well that he wanted to work. I spoke to a number of employers about him and told them of his reformation, but they only smiled at my optimism. One man, however, not a total abstainer himself, said: "Well, if ——— wants to quit he ought to have a chance." He gave him work. Soon it became evident that he was a new man and he was offered a position of responsibility, which he has filled with eminent success. He is now a respected and worthy member of society, and he insists strongly that the men under him must be temperate.
To my personal knowledge more than a dozen other men have taken Dr. McTaggart's treatment. A few of these were only half-hearted; they wouldn't take it regularly, or they did not complete it, and continued to cultivate the old evil company. These few were improved but not cured. I have carefully observed as far as in my power and have made every possible inquiry about each man I knew of taking the Cure, and so far as I can learn, every man who faithfully followed the directions, and completed the course, was perfectly cured, and has stayed cured.
The few cases of failure referred to only prove what Dr. McTaggart insists on very strongly, namely, that unless a man is really desirous of giving up the use of strong drink no medicine can cure him, or at least the cure will only be temporary, and as the Doctor unequivocally affirms only $25.00), without publicity or loss of time from business, lays it upon me as a duty and a pleasure to write these words of testimony in the hope that my brethren in the ministry may be encouraged to induce some poor slaves of the appetite to make a fight for freedom.
