Tact Needs to be Exercised in the Management of Old Parents in the Home, But There Should Also be the Element of Kindly Firmness

Dear Miss Dix—Five years ago my wife's mother, who is a helpless invalid, came to live with us. My salary is small and this makes it very difficult for us to take care of her.

Answer: The only sensible solution of the problem is for you to keep on with your job, for your wife to take the good place that is offered her and for you to hire a practical nurse who will take care of Mother-in-Law and do the housework.

VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

Doctor—I must say that the world is very ungrateful toward our profession. How seldom does one see a public memorial erected to a doctor?

"Ma," asked the little girl, who was reading a geography book, "where is the State of Matrimony?"

The Housewife And Her Activities

A PRAYER "These are the gifts I ask of Thee Spirit serene—

Strength for the daily tasks; Courage to face the road; Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load;

And for the hours of rest that come between, An inward joy in all things heard or seen."

A man needs to eat at least 30 pounds of calcium in a lifetime in order to provide the amount needed by his bones, teeth and other tissues.

Common Sense About Constipation A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with any ailment is to get at its cause.

Common Sense About Constipation (Continued) Millions of people prefer Kellogg's All-Bran, a ready-to-eat cereal, to keep them "regular."

Common Sense About Constipation (Continued) Eat All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water, and join the "Regulars!"

Common Sense About Constipation (Continued) Tea or coffee stains on a linen cloth which has been boiled can be removed easily and effectively by rubbing stain with pure glycerine a few hours before it is going to be washed.

Common Sense About Constipation (Continued) Cement for mending china can be made by dissolving 1-2 oz. gum arabic in about a wineglass of boiling water, adding plaster of Paris so as to make a thick paste.

CHRISTABEL

By PEARL BELLAIRS

"Forbidden, I'm afraid!" he said, with a little rueful grimace. "But only temporarily; my doctor has ordered me to go easy for a while, and I'm told I mustn't work either, my dear, so that leaves us free. So I suggest that we should get away at once, anywhere; it's wedding in a registry office next Monday. And that we should leave immediately afterwards for wherever we are going."

Christabel saw behind all this, his care that there should be no embarrassment for her, no awkward questions asked that might worry her as regards the past, and was grateful. In her there was still a void, a nerveless dullness like the anaesthetized parts of one's mouth after a tooth has been extracted; half herself was so bruised that it was numb, while the rest bubbled up with a mechanical light-heartedness.

TALK OF THE FUTURE They dined in a quiet corner of the hotel restaurant. Christabel's fingers stung fiercely again. She took her glove off. Blisters were forming on the backs of the fingers and middle finger, and the pain was so noticeable that she had to explain to him.

"I managed to put them into the fire while I was burning some rubbish! Ridiculous of me! No really it's nothing—they only sting a little!"

"You must have them dressed by a doctor! They look most painful. What a foolish child to put lovely fingers into the fire!"

"Rubbish! An odd description of Hewitson's manuscript! Mention of the matter sent a thrill of agony through her from her head to her feet. When she had recovered from that, she was plunged in doubt about her own honesty; whether she was obliged to tell Cavanagh, whether she should tell him or not."

"When will you leave the clinic?" Cavanagh asked. "To-morrow, if I can find someone to take my place!" Christabel replied, turning pale at the thought. She could never stay over Thursday when Hewitson would be there.

Cavanagh's car took her back to the Haifa Road, through the silent, deserted city, and along the Commercial road, empty of its usual traffic from the docks. It was when she arrived home that she began to suffer the deferred torment of thought about the scene that afternoon in Hewitson's flat.

She leaned on the sill of the open window, every nerve in her body aching, and stared out at the moonlit backs of little slate-roofed houses, and brick-walled yards where Monday's washing had been hung out to dry in the night, yet that the rain had gone. But here ever squallid the dull slum strept the sky was resplendent over the moon above full and filled the heavens with liquid light.

It seemed a night made for happiness. All the more tormenting Christabel because her soul felt bruised and battered to rise above its cares. (To Be Continued)
