The Eel-Grass Situation On The Atlantic Coast

By Harrison F. Lewis, Chief Federal Migratory Bird Officer, Ontario and Quebec, National Parks of Canada, Department of the Interior.

Eel-grass (Zostera marina L.) is a flowering plant, belonging to the pond-weed family, that grows in salt or brackish water along most sheltered shores of the sea in the middle north temperate zone, from about half-tide to a depth of a few feet below low-tide mark. On the Atlantic coast of North America it ranges along the shore from southern Labrador to North Carolina, with outlying stations in Hudson Bay and on the west coast of Greenland. Where the inter-tidal zone includes extensive suitable flats, as it does in many shallow bays, harbours, and estuaries on the eastern coast of Canada and the United States, this plant is often found growing in dense masses over large areas. It is often two to four feet long above ground, with long narrow, ribbon-like leaves. Beneath the surface of the soil each plant has a rootstock, about 3-16 of an inch in diameter and several inches long, furnished with numerous short roots. Eel-grass reproduces both by seeds and by vegetative propagation, which involves the production of lateral buds that eventually become separated from the parent stem by death and abscission of the older part of the rootstock. A plant grown from seed does not flower and produce seed until the second or third year.

The rootstocks or rhizomes of eel-grass form a very important food of Canada Geese and Brant, and the seeds are eaten to a large extent by Black Ducks and to some extent by other species of ducks. When in waters supplied with eel-grass, Brant feed upon it almost exclusively and Canada Geese rely upon it to a large extent. Eel-grass rootstocks constitute, under normal conditions, the essential food supply of several thousand Canada Geese that customarily winter in southwestern Nova Scotia, as well as of large numbers of both Geese and Brant wintering on the eastern coast of the United States.

The leaves and stems of eel-grass, when thoroughly dried are quite widely used in industry, especially for insulation and sound-proofing for buildings and for upholstering furniture. Under normal conditions thousands of tons of this plant are gathered annually in eastern Canada and United States for these industrial purposes. A great deal of eel-grass is also used locally by farmers near the shore for fertilizer and for banking the foundations of houses and other buildings in cold weather.

Unprecedented Scarcity

At the present time there is a notable and unprecedented scarcity of living eel-grass on the coasts of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and all of New Brunswick except the extreme north, and a similar scarcity is reported from the eastern sea-coast of the United States, from Maine southward at least to Virginia. Scarcity of this plant in areas where it is usually abundant is known to extend as far north on the eastern shore of New Brunswick as Tabusintac Lagoon, Northumberland County, which is no th of the estuary of the Miramichi River. In September, 1932, I personally observed this scarcity at Tabusintac, but on the same day failed to find any evidence of unusual scarcity at Caraquet, which is a little farther north, on the southern side of the Bale de Chaleur. Such a scarcity of eel-grass has not yet been reported from any

New Growth at Bucouche

In some places, as at Bucouche, New Brunswick, a few small scattered eel-grass plants that are apparently young and perfectly healthy are to be found on flats where all the original dense stand of eel-grass has died.

In south-western Nova Scotia, from Port Joli, Queens County, to Argyle, Yarmouth County, many extensive tidal flats, some of which are known to have been nearly bare of eel-grass about June 1st, 1932, showed in late September of this year large areas covered with a fairly dense growth of young eel-grass plants, with leaves five or six inches long. These plants look green and normal when viewed from a little distance, as from the shore, but on close examination show signs of an unhealthy condition similar to that found in older plants elsewhere. This makes it seem probable that this new growth of young plants, which has been the basis for popular reports that the eel-grass is "coming back" in this area, will soon, in its turn suffer severe reduction in numbers.

Eel-grass plants that are dying in the regions where this scarcity exists show black areas of considerable size on the leaves, at first near their tips, subsequently nearer the leaf-bases. Eventually each leaf, with accompanying disintegration, is progressive from the tip to the base, so that leaves whose proximal portions are still green and living while their distal portions are entirely missing are frequently observed. The extreme base of the leaf may remain green for some time after loss of almost all the

City Council Assists Health Department

In order that all children in the City may have an opportunity to be protected from Diphtheria, the City Council has made it possible that every child can be fully protected by three doses of toxoid for the sum of twenty-five cents. All children who are unable to pay this trifling amount will be done free.

The younger the child the greater the need for protection and the Health Department are anxious to protect all children from six months to twelve years. Cases of Diphtheria are occurring almost every week in our City. This condition need not exist. Many cities with populations many times that of ours have rid themselves of this unnecessary disease. It is costly from a financial standpoint as well as a menace to good health.

Toxoid Clinics are to be held each week in the different city schools commencing at West Kent School this afternoon. Notice of the clinic appears elsewhere in today's edition. It is to be hoped that all parents will make a great effort to present their children for this much needed protection.

IN MEMORIAM

DONALD D. MCPHERSON

Mr. Donald D. McPherson, Bellevue passed away at his home Nov. 12th, 1932 after a few days illness in his 79th year. Mr. McPherson must have been one of those farmers who dearly loved not only his home but his native province. He never left P. E. I. except for about two months in New Brunswick in his young days. He farmed industriously, carefully and economically. He reared his family in comfort, training them in the ways of sobriety and virtue with gentle parental authority leading them at the family altar in the home and in the daily duties of their honorable calling on the farm. Of decided Presbyterian convictions he loved the church of his fathers, the Presbyterian Church in Canada. He was an adherent member of Caledonia. There survives to mourn and miss a gentle and kind husband and father, his widow, two sons and one daughter, Dan, William and Norman on the farm, Miss
