A reader of The Guardian, incited thereto by the zoological linericks published in Monday's Guardian on page 2, sends the following in order to show that Charlottetown is able to contribute a verse just as well as any other place:—

To a duck was his next place to go.
 To ask for a duck-at or so:
 But the duck was a quack—
 He looked over his back—
 And said: "My pond-oil's are low."

There is nothing that brightens up a coat or skirt that is beginning to look shabby like a good cleaning and pressing and the fact that Sterns' Steam Laundry has turned out nearly seven hundred garments during the past summer and is still turning them out at the rate of about twenty-five a week is a guarantee that this laundry is particularly fitted for the work and giving perfect satisfaction. The ad in this issue is very interesting and should be read by ad.
