It appears that a citizen was out celebrating the arrival of a new baby and happened into the Aberdeen. He asked the clerk to change him some money, but as no change was available he asked for the loan of $2.00. The clerk, thinking the matter a jest, passed it off lightly. "You won't let me have it?" asked the would-be borrower. The reply was in the negative, and at that the man whipped out a revolver and took a shot at the clerk. It is stated that the latter was quick enough to strike the man's arm, deflecting the course of the bullet, which buried itself in the cash register, where the bullet hole remains, as mute witness of the affair.
