Get Ready For Insect Invasions

With the approach of spring and the busy season ahead, the attention of all growers of fruit and vegetables is directed to the need for thoroughly conditioning their spraying and dusting equipment before field work actually begins. In the control of insects pests, preparedness is one of the most important steps to success. To control many of the more injurious species, it is essential to apply remedial measures just as soon as the insects appear. Delay is usually costly, states the Division of Entomology, Science Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture. The only way to be ready for crop invasion is to have all spraying and dusting machinery in first class conditions before activity in the field commences. All moving parts should be gone over carefully, cleaned, tightened and oiled. Worn parts should be renewed to prevent future breakdowns, hose connections tightened and in the case of motor-driven equipment, engines completely overhauled and tested making certain that everything in connection with the equipment is working smoothly and perfectly. Insecticides carried over from last season should be checked, discarding any that show deterioration. They should be replaced at once so that later on valuable time and energy will not be wasted in rushing to town to purchase lead arsenate or other necessary poisons. It would also be a good plan to secure instructions and literature outlining the most approved method.
