THE UPSIDE-DOWN WATCH

A Successor to the Wrist Watch for Use by Soldiers.

The wrist watch, which rose so high in popularity on account of the endorsement given it by men of the army and navy, has retired to second place in the soldiers' favor. The reason for this is not that this style of watch proved to be less convenient than it promised, but that bullets and bursting shrapnel which constantly threatens the exposed men are likely to strike the arm wearing the watch and fastens it securely in and metal into the flesh, thus aggravating the wounds.

The watch which now holds first place is worn suspended from the belt by a loop of leather. The loop ends in a pocket into which the watch fits. The front surface of the pocket has a circular opening through which the face of the watch shows. A small strap encircles the watch an dfastens it securely in place, buckling on the outside of the pocket. The watch hangs top-downward, but when the wearer raises it in his hand or glances down at it as it hangs from the belt, it is in just the proper position to be read. If it should happen to be shattered by a bullet the particles of glass or metal would be caught and held in the leather case, so that they would do no harm. Many a fighter has had to thank the watch on his wrist for stopping a bullet that might have necessitated the loss of an arm. The very fact that the upside-down watch is carried against a more vulnerable part of the body than is the wrist watch, makes it all the more valuable as a protective medium. It may be worn under the cartridge belt.—Popular Science Monthly.

FOUGHT UNTIL SHIPS SANK BENEATH THEM

OTTAWA.— An attack by three Austrian cruisers on a line of British drifters employed in guarding anti-submarine nets in the Straits of Otranto on May 15, is described in a London despatch to Reuter's Limited Ottawa Agency. The account of the engagement follows:—

"The drifters, in eight divisions of about six boats each, were formed along a line running roughly east and west. Each carried a crew of ten men and one small gun. In one case the enemy appears to have acted with chivalry toward the little craft, signaling by means of blasts of the siren and by dipping the flag that the crews must abandon their vessels. This cruiser approached to within 100 yards of the Gowanlea and ordered her crew to take to the boats.

"Skipper J. Watt, shipping the nets, replied by ordering full speed ahead, and calling on the crew for three cheers, commanded them to fight to a finish. They manned the gun and fired with good effect until a shot from the cruiser disabled the gun. They hung on under heavy fire, endeavoring to repair the damage until the cruiser passed out of range.

"The Gowanlea then proceeded to the assistance of the badly damaged Leondia, which had four men killed and three wounded, but whose skipper, though three times wounded, remained at his post throughout the action. Meanwhile the remaining cruisers had opened a devastating fire on the centre of the line.

"The crew of the Admirable only abandoned their vessel after her boiler exploded and her whole house had been shot away. Even then A. Gordon, a second hand, scrambled back on board with the evident intention of firing the gun single-handed, but was killed.

"The Girl Rose, Cora T. Haven and Selby were not abandoned by their crews until they foundered under them. The crew of the sinking Taits on taking to the boats discovered one of their number to be missing. They returned to the vessel through a heavy fire to search for their shipmate. Second hand Joseph Hendry, of the Serena, remained on board until the ship sank, rather than be taken prisoner. He was picked up an hour later. The crews of the Garrigill, Bonespoir, Christmas Day, and British Crown, refused to leave their vessels, even when outranged and under broadside fire from the enemy and brought them through the action.

"The enemy displayed an anxiety to destroy the wireless telegraphy of the drifter in each group. The wireless operator of the Leondia was found dead in his chair at the conclusion of the action, having collapsed over the wireless log in which he was writing at the moment of his death.

ADMIRAL JELLECOE ON SUB MENACE

LONDON—Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, first sea lord and chief of the naval staff, in an interview with the Associated Press today discussed the submarine menace and the naval situation at the end of the third year of the war.

"You ask me to say something of the submarine menace," he began. "It is serious because all the allied armies and civil population are, in varying degrees, dependent on sea transport, but, viewed broadly, the recourse by the Germans to this form of piracy is encouraging. They did not adopt it until they had lost hope in the victory of their armies. They did not risk drawing the United States into the war and concentrating on hemselves the loathing of all neutral states until they were convinced that they could not get a keel on the world's seas and by legitimate means interfere with the growth of the military strength of the allies.

"For three years naval power has been in process of translation into military power. The Germans in desperation, decided to embark upon ruthless submarine warfare in the confident belief that it would prove a fatal stroke. In February, according to their own confession, it was the best and only means of a speedy and victorious ending of the war.'

"March, April, May, June and July have passed an dheir early hopes are still unrealized. The Germans have not mastered us, but we have not mastered the submarine. We have not yet discovered the effective antidote. But we have reduced the loses of merchant shiping.

"There is no reason to doubt that Germans have at sea lately a far larger number of submarines than in February and March, but, nevertheless, with the invaluable assistance which America has rendered, we have prevented them from reaping their harvest. How long the Germans will live in hopes deferred I cannot say, but they must realize that the prophecy of February, resting on official authority, that the submarine was the best and only means of a speedy and victorious ending of the war, has not been fulfilled.

SPAIN ENJOYING GREAT PROSPERITY

Spain's economic situation must appear extraordinary to those who have not followed its development since the war began, for in that period the miraculous has happened, and Spain has been transformed from a poor country to a rich one and has more money, and that in gold, than she knows what to do with. But international politics are causing much anxiety. Here is money, but where is the future trade? The very joy of the Spaniard but yesterday at the soaring value of the peseta is turning to some misgivings. By way of stating a simple item of news, let it be mentioned that at this moment the Spanish peseta is worth more than ever before, and it is the only coin in the old world that is constantly and unvaryingly increasing in value, in comparison with its foreign rivals.

Peseta Alone at Par

At the moment of writing the rate of exchange on London is 21.63 pesetas (for £1 sterling.) Compare this with 27.17 of the French franc and 33.27 of the Italian lira, which are nominally of the same value, and the appreciation in the value of Spanish money will be understood. A year ago there was much satisfaction that at last Spain had a reserve of a thousand million pesetas stored in the vaults of the Banco de Espano. This sum has since increased to 1,383,000,000, so we have the increasing value of the peseta with the shortage of gold in other countries.

Not an Unmixed Advantage

The soaring value of the peseta is not an unmixed commercial advantage. Obviously its purchasing power in foreign countries is greater than that of other moneys, but a difference arises in trade relations with one of the chief customers, England. All freight from Spain to England is contracted and paid for in pounds sterling without regard to the variations in value of the peseta, and the Spanish end is the loser by getting fewer pesetas for the pound than formerly. Iron, copper, pyrites, fruits and other Spanish exports to England are also paid for on the English standard.

Greatly Increased Wealth

But if the Spanish trader suffers in this way, his gains are so substantial in other directions as to justify the statement that the country is enjoying great prosperity, such as could not have been dreamed of three years ago. The bank statements show that in 1915 and 1916 there has been an increase in current accounts of 350 million pesetas, 100 million in savings bank deposits, and 1,250 million in securities deposited. The greatly-increased exports of Spain and the high freights earned by her shipping have immensely enhanced the national wealth. As to the scope for the development of manufactures, it is enormous, for Spain is even now increasing her imports and consumption of manufactured articles and decreasing her exports of them. The Customs returns show that last year Spanish imports were 1,281 million and exports 1,383 million pesetas, but the imports increased 72 million over the previous year, while exports decreased 40 million for the same period.

Too Much Gold!

The great question is what to do with the money that is owing to Spain, the sum of which is fast increasing, as a special correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor points out. It is already perceived that there is a limit to the advantages of gold-hoarding, and it has, perhaps, been reached. It is of no use to the country to keep on piling it up in the vaults of the Banco de Espano, where it merely aggravates some of the disconcerting circumstances of the time. Enough has already been stacked there to satisfy national pride and prestige and to lead to some sort of national financial stability. It is doing nothing while it is thus stored, and these 1,300,000,000 pesetas laid up now are already an expensive luxury. It has been urged that the gold standard should be put into circulation throughout Spain and that the collected gold and what is owing should be used for the purpose. If this were done it would lead to many sound benefits for the country in exterior. Another alternative is that the stored gold should be employed for the development of existing industries and the establishment of new ones, but against this is mentioned that there is ample evidence—some of it mentioned here—that there is abundant money in the private possession determined upon.

Harry Breen, the vaudevillean, tells of living with one Kerrigan, who was a man of decided likes and dislikes. Said Breen: "Kerrigan, do you like lettuce?" "No sor, Oi don't," said Kerrigan, "and what's more, Oi'm glad Oi don't, for av Oi did, O'd ate it—and Oi hate the stuff."
